ARTS

Real to Reel film festival set at Joy

BY ANDIE L. BRYMER
Staff Writer

Film buffs can get their fill of the silver screen tonight and this weekend at the Joy Performance Center. The fifth annual Real to Reel Film Festival starts at 7 p.m.

Crowds are expected. The Cleveland County Arts Council has sold more advance tickets this year than ever before, according to Paul Foster, arts council marketing coordinator.

He attributes this to more people hearing about the festival and possibly the box office success of Michael Moore's "Fahrenheit 911."

At least four film makers will be at the festival to answer questions about their work. The film makers who visit typically enjoy the small town atmosphere, according to Foster.

Film makers coming to town include Greg Young who made "Yellowlegs;" Christopher Baldi, "Grace and the Storm;" Mary Dalton, "Potter at Large" and Chris Herron, "A Fall from the Clouds."

"Fort Fisher Hermit," "Grace and the Storm," "Tom Whittaker" and "Veronika's Birthday" have a North Carolina connection.

Real to Reel will show animation, shorts, documentaries and feature films made by both professionals and amateurs.

Tonight's films include: "This Udderly Sucks" and "A Fall From the Clouds," both are short animations; "Pet Assassins," a short; "Aging Out," a documentary about children growing too old to be served by the foster care system; "Tom Hits His Head," a short; "Do You Know That Yellowlegs is a Storytelling Museum," a documentary and "Prise D'Eux - Take Two," a short.

Films begin again Friday at 7 p.m. with "Leatherwood Bat" and "Islet/Ilot," both short animation; "Spotters," a meditative documentary about memory and photography; "Blue," animation, "Mad Matt," a documentary, "Last Stand," a short and "Mary-Mary," a feature about the spread of a young man's neurosis.

The Saturday matinee begins at 1 p.m. and includes "The Balloon," an animated short; "Tom Whittaker: Potter At Large," a documentary about a Mooresboro, North Carolina potter; "Teddy's End," an animated short; "The Watershed," a documentary about the transforming power of survival, forgiveness, tragedy and deprivation and "Expiration," a feature about a botched wedding proposal which spirals into a chaotic odyssey.

Saturday night's films begin at 7 p.m. with "Process," a short about Vermont; "Free Radicals," an animated short; "The Fort Fisher Hermit," a documentary about a Shelby native who moved to the beach; "Love Tricycle," animation; "Willis Sillim's Tall Tale," an animated short; "Perils in Nude Modeling," a short; "Veronika's Birthday," a short about a woman's visit to her overbearing grandmother and "Grace and the Storm," a feature about an exhausted Manhattan drug dealer who tries to turn his life around for love.

Rating range from G to R. Tickets are $5 per session or $10 for a festival pass. For more information, call 704-484-2787.
