KMHS students give blood

Cadbury eggs, chocolate bunnies, and peeps are common gifts at Easter. This year, however, students at the high school decided to give a gift that is far more precious and valuable. The students who gave at the high school saved the lives of up to three people each; they gave something that only five percent of the population gives; they gave something that can not be produced in any factory; they gave their own blood.

For his Senior Project, Josh Sutton, contacted the American Red Cross and convinced them to bring the blood mobile by the high school on March 18. Josh's original goal was to have at least 55 people give. In the end he had 83 people, including myself, sign up.

While waiting in line to give blood, and while reading the seemingly never-ending requirements and guidelines of giving blood, I met a lot of interesting people. One such person was Shandea Byers. It was Shandea's first time giving blood. While nervously waiting, she had this to say, "I'm about to pass out, but I am glad to be able to help."

I think this is the way most volunteers were feeling while waiting to give blood.

After inquiring with a group of those who had already given blood, I learned that most people were returning donors who wanted the same rewarding experience they felt the last time they donated. I must say that I am extremely impressed by the people who signed up to give blood and I am shocked that more people did not sign up to do so.

I understand that some people have a fear of needles, or don't meet one of the five hundred qualifications to give blood (I didn't) but I also know that there are plenty of people who could give blood and just chose not to for no good reason. I must say that that is one of my greatest pet peeves, when somebody can do something for the greater good and they chose not to.

Now don't get me wrong, I know it is impossible to help everybody all the time, and I don't expect that by any means. I just think that it is ridiculous how people shrug off a life saving act so easily. Especially one that on average only takes 10 minutes.

So, I guess what I am saying is that next year when you start getting into the Easter spirit, take 10 minutes out of your day and do something for the greater good. In fact, why wait till next year; after all, we are still in the Easter Season.

Donna Tackett is a senior at Kings Mountain High School. She writes a twice monthly column for the Herald.

North students visit farms

Earlier this month 45 North Elementary students visited area farms for an up close look at agriculture in Cleveland County.

At Mr. and Mrs. Jack Scism's farm they learned about turkey farming. The couple has been in business since 1987 and has 12,000 birds on their farm. The students toured a turkey house.

Mr. Scism explained that turkeys leave their farm at about eight to 10-weeks-old for CarGill Company.

Mrs. Scism demonstrated picking, seeding and bailing cotton, another commodity grown on the family farm. The Scisms also grow soybeans, wheat and barley.

At Killdeer Farm, the group learned from Mr. and Mrs. Ervin Lineberger that farming is not simple. Mr. Lineberger explained that plants must get a precise amount of water and food.

The Linebergers also explained that the farm gets its name from the killdeer bird which lives on the ground and eats insects which are harmful to the crops.

Mrs. Sellers, Ms. Parker and Ms. Garr's students visited the farms as part of National Agriculture Week.
