TOWER

western North Carolina to receive funding.

"I appreciate everybody working together, that's a requirement of Homeland Security [grants,]" Proctor said.

Sheriff Raymond Hamrick said the system should be operational by 2008.

"I'm proud to be part of it," he said.

Highway Patrol First Sgt. David Allen praised the project, saying it was the first major upgrade to communications since 1935.

Emergency Management Director Dewey Cook said representatives from law enforcement, fire, EMS and Cleveland HealthCare System worked as a team to make the project a reality.

County communications engineer Joe Cherry was described as "the man who put it all together," by County Commission Chairman Ronnie Hawkins.

With the new radio system all county, state and federal agencies can communicate directly instead of carrying several radios tuned to different departments' frequencies.

In the meantime, the county has used a "band-aid" system of old radios, Cherry said.

"That has served us well but has not addressed the overall problem," he said.

A $1.54 million grant will pay for the system which also includes towers in Shelby and Boiling Springs.
