since the club was organized over 50 years ago. Their beautification efforts have earned them local and state recognition over the years. Dumpsters were removed from the back parking lots and shrubs and flowers were added in the islands of the expansive area. Every year since 1993 a Crepe Myrtle tree was planted by the club and last year the remaining 17 were planted to complete the project.

The ongoing Cherokee

Street project has drawn praise from city leaders who have encouraged store owners to join in the beautification effort by improvements to the backs of their buildings. The stores front on W. Mountain Street and South Battleground Ave. Bridges said that some store owners have become excited and got involved in the beautification effort and have remodeled exteriors of their buildings.

"We want to have beauty in our city and we want to make Kings Mountain an inviting place to visit and to live," said Mrs. Bridges.

FIRE

smoke inhalation. Belle, a loyal pet and family member, was found inside after the fire. She did not make it back out the last time Fender did and died of smoke inhalation.

"I look back and think what I could have or should have done. I should have known better. It says flammable on the bottle (polish remover)," Fender said.

The day before the fire, she recalled continuously smelling the odor of burning plastic. Tuesday morning, when the fire occurred, both of her daughters, remember feeling a coughing or choking sensation while in their separate classrooms at Kings Mountain High School. Two days before the fire started, Fender had a dream of the house catching fire. These premonitions and bad vibes, that were excused at the time, now add to their regret.

The Fender family has a hard time sleeping at night, haunted by the fire that took so much away. Video tapes and other items filled with fond memories of her daughters' childhoods may have been destroyed. Their clothes are infused with an odor that will never wash out. The insurance adjuster has labeled the remains "a total loss."

But the Bibles in her nightstand are still intact. The outside covers are barely singed and the inside looks just as it did before. Not a verse or word is missing, signifying that hope and faith will make it through the hottest fires. As much as they have lost, they still have each other. The Fender family has a chance of making more fond memories from the life that was spared.

"Everything happens for a reason," said Fender's boyfriend, Bobby Wooten, hinting that this "total loss" may not be a total loss in the long run.

She had lived in the single-wide trailer behind her mother's house for 6 years. The family of four is now currently staying in a one-bedroom apartment. Her mother, Kathy Lovelace, has set up an account for public donations at the BB&T in Kings Mountain under the names of Kathy Lovelace and Ronda Fender.

Fender says, "We need prayers more than anything." She took her Bibles to church with her on Easter Sunday.

City hiring freeze to continue

ELIZABETH STEWART
Herald Correspondent

A freeze on hiring and spending will continue by the City of Kings Mountain until July 1, Interim City Manager Marilyn Sellers said this week.

Sellers, who held her first meeting with city department officers last week as the city's executive officer, said no vacancies will be filled until after the new fiscal year starts July 1. She said all spending by departments must be approved by her office.

Mayor Rick Murphrey said that Sellers and finance officer Lori Hall have been busy "putting the figures together on the new budget" and that city council will probably get its first look or draft of a proposed 2006-2007 budget the first or second week of May. Several work sessions will be scheduled in May for budget review and possible revisions and public hearing and formal adoption will probably be at a special meeting in mid June. The proposed budget will be on display at city hall and available to citizens prior to the public hearing.

"We're cutting all we can cut and we are asking employees to do that," said Sellers.

The mayor said the loss of 25 percent in revenues from natural gas and water and sewer due to the down sizing of industry will be reflected in the upcoming budget.

Murphrey said city employees who operate vehicles in police, fire and public works departments are cutting costs as closely as possible but not cutting services to citizens.

Pearson receives Diamond Award

EMILY WEAVER

Coldwell Banker Realtor, Margaret Pearson has just received the Diamond Award, which recognizes the individuals that have the top 13 percent in real estate sales across the nation.

She joined Horn Real Estate in Kings Mountain, the largest Coldwell Banker broker in Cleveland County, in 2003.

Within three short years she has managed to put herself among America's top sellers.

A broker must make 35 unit sales or more per year to receive this award.

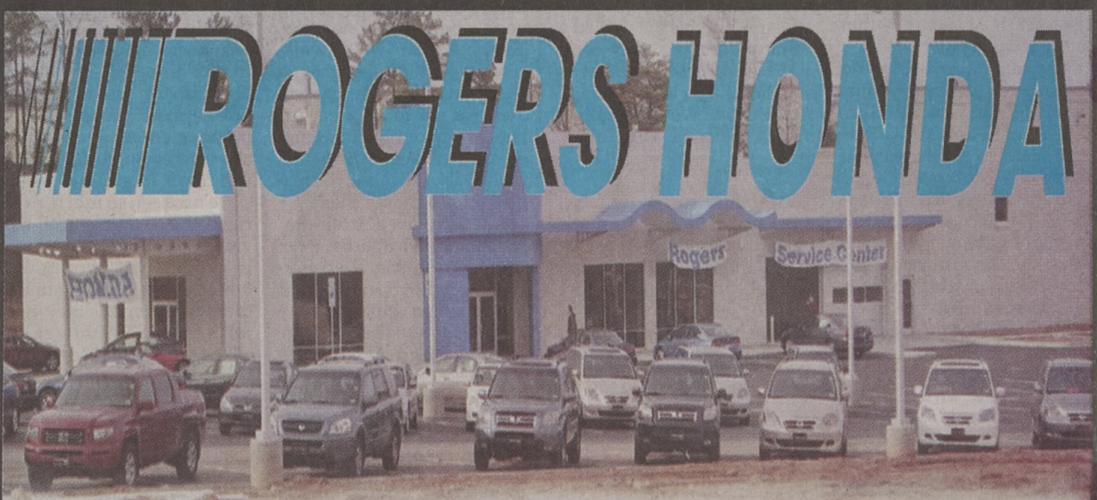

She graduated from Winthrop University in 1980 with a BS in Marketing. Before she became a realtor, she worked as a Business teacher for Kings Mountain High School. She is married to Roy "Butch" Pearson, Jr. and has two sons: Isaac, 12, and Jack, 9. She was born in Greenwood, SC but loves to call Kings Mountain home.

"Butch and Kings Mountain were love at first sight," said Pearson. The love she feels for this town comes out whenever she sells a real estate property.

She said that knowing the banker and the lawyer makes her job a little easier. "There is a lot of neighborism in Kings Mountain," Pearson said, adding that that is one of the things she loves most.
