Laura Bingham receives Order of Long Leaf Pine honor

Laura Bingham

Laura Carpenter Bingham, former resident of Kings Mountain, is recipient of the Order of the Long Leaf Pine, the most prestigious honor granted by a North Carolina governor.

Former Lt. Gov. Bob Jordan, for whom Bingham worked as a staffer when she was in her 20s, presented the award signed by Governor Beverly Perdue at Bingham's recent retirement from Peace College where she was the first alumna president for 12 years.

Bingham, wife of Warren Bingham of Raleigh, is the daughter of Marion and Charles T. Carpenter Jr., formerly of Kings Mountain and now of Raleigh.

Todd Robinson, chair of the Board of Trustees, also announced at a dinner honoring Bingham that Peace College will name its newest residence hall after outgoing President Bingham and her husband, Warren Bingham.

"The hallmark of her presidency has been her passion for Peace, the place and her love of its students," Robinson said. "Her many significant accomplishments as president reiterate her student-centered focus - from the millions of dollars that have been raised for scholarships, to the endowed professorships that have been established in fine arts, business, leadership and international study to the internships she has encouraged friends and alumnae in the business community to sponsor."

Completed in 2005 at a cost of $4.5 million, Bingham Hall contains apartment-style residences for 66 students, primarily juniors and seniors. It is situated on the north side of Peace's downtown Raleigh campus which was acquired by the college during Bingham's tenure. During the Bingham tenure, Peace Junior College became a four year liberal arts college with establishment of the only leadership bachelor's program in the state, new and renovated buildings, the launch of Peace's first evening adult degree programs, addition of bachelor of science programs, and establishment of the NC Center for Women in NC Public Service.
