Weatherly will be missed

Weatherly, who died Saturday.

His legislation in the North Carolina House of Representatives from Cleveland County made it a law to turn on a car's headlights when it's raining.

And, of course, there was other legislation he was involved in but most of us who called him from time to time for news from his Raleigh office will remember that particular law. We also called him at home sometimes with questions and he always responded with answers.

Elected to the House of Representatives in 1988, his freshman term marked the end of Democratic domination for the first time since Reconstruction after the Civil War.

Prior to moving to Kings Mountain, he lived in Newton for a number of years and served on the Catawba County Board of Commissioners.

One of his attributes was that he enjoyed the fine service he gave to people from both parties. He served four terms in the House and in 2002 ran and came close to winning a Senate seat. As the North Carolina legislature convenes in Raleigh Republicans will again dominate the House and the Senate. He would have kept close tabs on them and offered advice when asked.

His funeral service will be held Saturday at 2 p.m. at Shelby Presbyterian Church.

John Weatherly was liked by all who knew him and was a gentleman.

John Weatherly

Representative John Weatherly: A Gentleman's Gentleman

Wayne King
Guest columnist

There are few who in my years of involvement in local, state and national politics that have made such an impression on me, and indeed, helped shape my philosophy and management style as the late John Weatherly. For it was under Representative John Weatherly that I had my first ever foray into the world of state politics while serving as a teenager as a North Carolina House Page in 1995, afforded by his sponsorship.

As I watched the men and women assemble from all across our state, there were indeed many who were kind, respectful and genuinely interested in the young people who were there serving. Of course, as is many times the case, I also got to observe some of the worst of characters and how they spoke to and regarded others.

John Weatherly was a man who carried himself in stark contrast to all of the others that I met there and not just because he was my local connection and indeed took upon himself to look after my well-being in Raleigh.

I can truly say that the man I observed was nothing less than a gentleman's gentleman.

The air with which he conducted himself, how he greeted everyone he came in contact with from the janitorial workers to those in high office, he was kind and generous to all. Truly, that is John Weatherly's legacy.

His resume, though he never made habit of offering it, reads like a modern day American hero.

He was a retired forester with Bowater Carolina and a past president of the Society of American Foresters, NC Division. He was a past Rotary Club president, and past member of the board of trustees of Catawba Valley Community College.

A United States Marine, a fighter pilot, an officer with the rank of Major who served in both WWII and Korea and a recipient of the Air Medal in 1944.

He was a former elder and teacher at Shelby Presbyterian Church and a former Boy Scout leader for over 30 years.

He served in elective office as a Catawba County Commissioner and then as a member of the North Carolina State House, serving at different times with his first term in the 1989-1990 session.

More than all of those years of decorated and noble service, his greatest accolade, in my opinion, is that through all of his life, he was a gentleman and a good friend to most if not all who knew him.

It is no wonder that John Weatherly was a loving husband, father and grandfather. He was a man of principle and gave respect and, it is my hope through this eulogy to extend to him the respect that he so deserved.

Those who knew John will miss him but we will all take comfort in knowing that his spark will live on in all the lives that had the opportunity to know him.
