GOLDEN GLEAMS

A man must learn to endure that patiently which he cannot avoid conveniently.

by PETER G. HAMMOND
Executive Director, National Coordinating Council on Drug Education

Industry's concern about drug abuse is justified. An entire range of practices, including possession and use of drugs, trafficking, larceny of plant materials, thefts of trade secrets, chronic absenteeism, increased workman's compensation claims and product liability litigation, is increasingly part of the drug problem. Consequently, confrontations will occur between employers and user and nonuser employees, each citing contractual rights and obligations while invoking constitutional guarantees, labor and civil rights legislation and company rules.

Violations of these laws, rules and regulations should be handled first within existing bodies of law. At the same time, industry should be part of a long-range goal to modify these laws on the basis of new medical, social and economic facts about drugs.

The imposition of these laws as well as disciplinary and security measures, in many cases, results in prolonged and costly legal contests. Solutions, therefore, must be based on the knowledge of applicable statutes and their application within the context of the broader medical and social issues of drug abuse.

These issues will be discussed at a series of Drug Abuse in Industry Symposia sponsored by the National Coordinating Council on Drug Education and the National Association of Manufacturers. The Symposia will be held October 11-12 in Detroit; and November 1-2 in Atlanta.
