Furnishings May Reflect China Thaw

RALEIGH--Thanks to an anticipated thawing of political relations with the People's Republic of China, we can expect to see more Chinese textiles and designs used in house furnishings and upholstery.

In textile design, as in all other Chinese art, many symbols are used, says Mrs. Edith McGlamery, extension house furnishings specialist, North Carolina State University.

For example, the peach, tortoise and pine indicate a long life; the pomegranate is a symbol of fertility. Clouds, geometric shapes and nature are other often used motifs.

Silks and delicate fibers are generally used in Oriental textiles. Embroidery is often used as a decorative touch.

Broyhill Praises Import Surcharge

Speaking Friday before the annual meeting of the National Association of Electrical Distributors, Congress - man James T. Broyhill praised the efforts of the Nixon-Administration in U.S. trade negotiations and called the ten percent surcharge on all import duties "the most direct attack on our balance of trade problems which has been employed in this century."

This action, and the concern demonstrated in recent trade negotiations on textile imports, indicate "recognition of the close relationship between our balance of trade and our domestic economic problems," Broyhill stated.

Broyhill also briefed the group on the purpose and organizational structure of "Phase 2" of the President's new economic policies and predicted strong Congressional support of this program.

He also spoke of the need for some type of legislation to clarify requirements for warranties and guarantees on consumer products. Several bills of this type are now under active consideration in the Commerce and Finance Subcommittee, of which Broyhill is the ranking Republican member.

"We just recognize," he stated, "that consumers are entitled to a clear presentation of the terms and conditions of any warranty or guarantee which accompanies a purchase. Such warranty should clearly state the service the purchaser will receive and the terms under which the item will be replaced or repaired. Failure to state these terms in clear and understandable language is a frequently heard complaint."

"At the same time," he continued, "we must work out legislation which will be both fair to the consumer and operable in the marketplace. It should not be the intent of the law to make a criminal of the well-meaning manufacturer or seller. Neither should we continue to allow the abuses which have flourished as a result of unclear and deceptive warranties."
