THE WORLD OF ENTERTAINMENT

THE TROJAN WOMEN

From the past comes the film "The Trojan Women." It's Michael Cacoyannis' film version based on the English translation of Edith Hamilton's Euripides drama

--the lamentation on war, where Athens destroys Troy.

The cast is made up of actresses who are good in their trade. In fact, Katharine Hepburn portrays Hecuba, the gray-headed, defeated Queen of Troy, in this film of humanity's tragedies.

Equal in performance are Helen (Irene Papas), Cassandra (Genevieve Bujold) and Andromache (Vanessa Redgrave).

One needs a little historical background of the times and events that lead up to the burning of Troy, the wars men wage against men, the impact of Helen, who runs away with Paris, and the other women of this particular war to grasp the powerful impact of the film story.
