Women's Editor...Sylvia Holmes

For the past two weeks my life has been revolving around the Little Theatre and the children's play which I have been directing. Strictly speaking, the job of the director is over when the first show is presented to the public and its then the responsi-bility of the stage manager to see that everything runs smoothly during each production,

"The Panda and the Spy" was a childrens play with a cast and crew of students and although everyone was well rehear-sed, I waited with trepidation every night for the unexpected

The first two performances went well and two broken light bulbs were about the only problems to arise. The third performance brought out some temperament-in a gun. When fired backstage there were no shots to be heard but even at the back of the auditorium I could hear frantic clicks as the sound effects man tried desperately to produce some gunfire.

The fourth performance was a director's nightmare. The play's plot called for some background circus music and a record player was used for that purpose. Unknown to us all, it had been plugged into a non-operational socket and was running on its batteries which quickly ran down after being used many times

Just minutes before the music was due to be heard. I was informed that the record player was not working. It was too late to do anything! The performers on stage, said their lines, pau-sed, not a note of music was heard. Bravely they ad-libbed line after line waiting for the sound of the circus band. Still no music was heard. Then finally, to my great relief, I heard the first few bars of the "Entry of the Gladiators." What I was hearing was not our Barnum and Bailey album but the youthful voices of the cast members who were backstage during that scene. Like seasoned troupers they provided the background and would you believe that they were so effective that the audience was hardly aware of our problem.

I am happy to report that our fifth and final show went off without a hitch, but I didn't relax until the final curtain call.

Women's League Sees Future Need For City Manager

The Kings Mountain Women's Voter's League had as guest speaker at their Thursday evening meeting, Mr. Bob Maner, Chariman of K.M. Planning Board. Mr. Maner gave a most interesting talk on the work of the board over the past several years, illustrating his talk with numerous books of important information the board has compiled over the years. Many of the projects have been successfully completed, such as, the Community Center, urban renewbetter residential sub-sion standards etc. division Many more projects are in the making: downtown redevelopment, water system improvement, etc. At the conclusion of the talk, and after discussion by the group, club members came to the concensus that eventually Kings Mountain is going to need a City Manager to keep up with its fu-ture growth, as it will be too much for a mayor and volunteer committees to handle.

After a short business meeting, the League ad-journed with plans to meet again the third Thursday in January. Women interested in their community are encouraged to attend these "learning together" meet-

Designers, LTD To Hold Show At Tega Cay

which is the name given to this year's fashion show, will show the result of com-bined efforts and talents of

All roads lead to Tega Cay. Or at least they will seem to be November 30 when Designers, Ltd., a group of York County women who design and sew their own fashions, will hold their third annual benefit fashion show

The evening begins at 7:30 p.m. with dinner and proceeds to a fashion showing of more than 50 original ensembles. Coats, capes, suits, loungewear, knit pon-chos, skirts, sweaters, men's clothes and formals will appear that have been produced from leathers, suedes, polyesters, furs, yarns, and a great variety of other materials.

The fashion show is unique not only because all the outfits in it were homesewn, but also because almost all of the fabrics, zippers, threads, have been donated by interested Carolina textilists. Over 600 yards of piece goods, seventy-three zipp-ers and an innumerable amount of thread have been combined with a variety of textures, colors and imagination. The result is a fashion show that can equal any New York showing and will most certainly spark the sale of Carolina products. Designers, Ltd is an organization of creative women who feel that the time is past when, in order to be stylish, a woman must follow the rules established by a known fashion designer. They want every woman to feel competent in choosing her own dedesigns according to her own individual tastes. They want each woman to make her own decisions about what to wear because of her personality and life style.

The two primary purposes of the club are to encourage creativity in women, themselves and others, and to promote the Carolina textile industries. "We want women to learn to sew," said one recently, "so the things in our shows aren't all perfect. Some are made by inexperienced seamstresses, and some by women who are sewing for the first time."

LETTER

RODNEY ROSS

Dear Louisa,

There is this boy I like and have liked for a long time but I've just not got the nerve to tell him. Anyit would really be too late because he has moved away. I miss him very much and I wish I could see him. This boy is very special to me and I care for him very much. Please answer in next weeks Gazette. R.C.--N.C.

If the boy has not moved very far from your home town why not send him a friendly card and ask him to comback some time and visit his old friends. I certainly would not advise you to put anything on the card that you might regret having written later on, for if this boy consider it something to laugh about and show it to others. If he does like you he will probably enjoy hearing from you and make plans for a visit at some future doesn't care for you he might
