

CC Group Takes Part In March

The Cleveland County Historical Association will take part in the Overmountain Victory Trail march on Saturday, announces Dr. Ryan Washburn, president, who said that members will depart from Fallston at 10 a. m.

Dr. Washburn said he hoped the event will be a big Cleveland County picnic at 11:30 a. m. at Britain Presbyterian Church on Highway 64 in Rutherford County where the Overmountain group in addition to other Cleveland County participants and their families will be stopping for lunch.

Local citizens wishing to take part on the 27-mile Cleveland County route are asked to contact County Marshal Joe Hendrick, county tax supervisor, at 482-8311.

The Overmountain Victory Marchers, numbering about 35 and joined by others along the route, in Burke County this week held a large celebration at the county fairgrounds with demonstrations of muzzle-loading, square dancing, clog-gins and special entertainment by country music and folk singers.

The marchers enter Rutherford County on Friday and will be joined by all interested Cleveland County citizens Saturday.

The march ends Tuesday, Oct. 7, at Kings Mountain National Military Park.

"WHERE'S FERGUSON'S TROOPS?"—In this scene from the National Geographic Society film — "Kings Mountain"— Col. Campbell asks a family of farmers near the mountain if they have seen Col. Ferguson's troops in the area. This film and two others will be shown tonight at Barnes Auditorium. This is a Kings Mountain Bicentennial Commission project.

At Barnes Auditorium Film On Kings Mountain Tonight

Tonight at 7:30 the Kings Mountain Bicentennial Commission presents three color films on a trio of historical events from the American Revolutionary War.

The films will be shown at B. N. Barnes Auditorium.

The films, produced with live action, period costuming and settings by the National Geographic Society, include "Kings Mountain," "Song of Molasses" and "Not Worth A Continental."

"Kings Mountain" dramatizes the bitter intensity of the Revolutionary War in the Carolinas. In its depiction the film shows the majority of the combatants were Americans — relative against relative in some cases.

Col. William Campbell, commander of the patriots known as the Overmountain Men, leads his troops to the slopes of Kings Mountain where he and Cleveland, Shelby, Hambright and other historical figures met and defeated Col. Patrick Ferguson's regulars and Tories in a bloody hour-long battle.

The film also goes on to the trials held eight days later near Gilbert Town to determine which of the Tories were guilty of hanging offenses.

"Song of Molasses" takes place in the mid-1760s when the American colonies faced strict enforcement of a new British import tax on molasses. Job Smith is caught and his ship and cargo seized when he declares and pays tax on only a part of the cargo. Smith's fellow citizens demand a gesture of protest against the tax and the seizure and Smith finds himself torn between protest and submission.

"Not Worth A Continental" takes place in the winter of 1777-78 when both the British in Philadelphia and the Continental Army at Valley Forge were in desperate need of food and other supplies. A Continental foraging party stops at a Pennsylvania farm where a mother and three children are living off meager food supplies. The party discovers a hidden cache of food, then must decide who needs the supplies more — the Army or the family.

These three films are part of a package of 12 under the title "Decades of Decision."

Tickets are $1.25 and are available at all drug stores in Kings Mountain. The fees from ticket sales will go toward the purchase of the film "Kings Mountain" which will be given to the Kings Mountain Senior High library for use in the community and in the school system.

The films will run approximately 90 minutes, according to Sarah Faunce, chairman of the Bicen films committee.
