It's Time To Get Flu Shots

Doctors throughout North Carolina will soon begin administering a protective flu vaccine to thousands of "high-risk" individuals—those 65 and over, and those of any age with certain medical conditions.

Inoculations will begin at many public health departments around the middle of September, according to Dr. J. Newton MacCormack, head of the Communicable Disease Control Branch, Department of Human Resources. He estimated that there are 700,000 persons in the state in the high-risk category who will be especially vulnerable to complications from an attack of influenza. "Pneumonia is the most common complication, and coupled with certain chronic conditions it can create a very dangerous situation for the patient."

Some of the medical conditions in the high-risk groups are chronic heart disease, bronchitis, tuberculosis, emphysema, kidney disease, diabetes, and other chronic metabolic diseases.

Dr. MacCormack says that epidemiologists do not expect a pandemic (worldwide epidemic) of flu this year, "although we are likely to have the usual outbreaks here and elsewhere." He says that all evidence points to three strains of flu this coming season—A-Brazil, B-Hong Kong, and A-Texas—that will occur among the high-risk groups. ("Russian" flu, he says, occurs mostly among the young.)

The approved vaccine for the elderly and chronically ill will protect against the three expected strains.

Based on past experience, about one-fourth of those in the high-risk groups will get the vaccine, says Dr. MacCormack, "although we certainly hope this percentage can be improved."

The shots should be obtained by "high-risk" individuals from a family doctor, or free of charge at participating local health departments.

Fall Is The Time To Plant Lawns

The best time of year is approaching for most Cleveland County residents to establish a new lawn or renovate an old lawn.

Frank Spencer, Cleveland County extension chairman, said the most widely grown grass in Cleveland County is tall fescue.

Fescue is a cool season grass, which means that it does best planted after hot weather is over. The ideal time to plant fescue in Cleveland County is September 1 to September 15.

"If you are thinking about starting or redoing your own, let me suggest that you take a few minutes and consider some pointers on lawns from the N.C. Agricultural Extension Service," Spencer said.

One way to get lawn information is to call Extension Teletip. Teletip is a statewide, toll free telephone answering service operated by Extension. By calling a single number, North Carolina residents can get information on any of nearly 800 topics on Teletip.

Included are several messages related to lawns. The title of these messages and their number are as follows: Care of Fescue Lawns, 2217; Fescue and Bluegrass Disease Control, 2219; Grass in Shady Areas, 2221; Renovating Old Lawns, 2225; Starting a New Lawn, 2227; Watering Lawns, 2229; and Care of Bluegrass Lawns, 2244.

To hear these messages, call Teletip at 1-800-662-7801 and tell the operator the number of the messages you wish to hear. For further information on lawns contact the local Agricultural Extension Office at 130 South Post Road. The telephone number is 482-4385.
