Energy Steps Taken

By ELIZABETH STEWART
Co-Editor

The city board of commissioners took steps Monday night to seek energy crisis assistance for low-income families.

Acting on the mayor's recommendation, the board authorized the Mayor to head a local committee which will insure that Kings Mountain citizens have every opportunity to qualify for two programs—an energy crisis program which would provide maximum of $400 per household for fuel assistance, and a winterization-weatherization assistance plan for such items as storm doors, windows and insulation for qualifying individuals.

The Mayor told the board "it's important that the city get in line now for these programs which are part of the Excise Profit Tax Bill which is part of the energy bill now before the Congress."

"We're anticipating the approval of the Energy Bill," said the Mayor, "but of course we know there's no guarantee. However," he continued, "I feel these funds will be available before the real severe winter sets in."

Replying to question of Comm. Jim Childers, the mayor said he does not know how the program will be administered but that Governor Hunt would apply for funds and choose the state agency to administer them.

The Mayor said he will appoint a committee to work with him locally and announce a schedule for taking of applications from families of low-moderate income. The funds will be limited and the required forms will include certification of income levels.

"We want to make every citizen aware of this energy assistance program and help them make proper application. The decision on who receives the funds will rest with state government," said the mayor.

Continued improvements for the city recreation program at Deal Recreation Complex and Davidson Park were approved by the commission who voted to install irrigation systems, estimated to cost $1350.64 at the two new youth baseball fields at Deal Complex and at Davidson Park Baseball Field, where the estimated cost of irrigation would be $1547.05. The Mayor reported that two new fields have been constructed for Little League players at Deal St. where fencing and lighting has been included in the improvements. At the
