Construction Is Approved

Footo Mineral Company today announced that Sociedad Chilena de Litio, Limitada (SCL) approved construction of a lithium carbonate facility in Chile. SCL, a Chilean limited partnership formed in 1980, is 55% owned by Footo and 45% by the Chilean Government Development Company, Corporacion de Fomento de la Produccion (CORFO).

The lithium carbonate facility which is designed to produce annually 14 million pounds of Lithium carbonate from a brine deposit in the Salar de Atacama in northern Chile is estimated to cost approximately $61.2 million. The decision to proceed with the project was made after completion of a feasibility study and preliminary engineering which was begun in 1975.

Final engineering on the new facility will begin immediately, with construction scheduled to begin in early 1982. Completion of construction and start of production is scheduled for 1984.

Footo Mineral Company, located in Exton, Pa., is a major producer of ferroalloy and lithium products. Footo currently produces lithium carbonate from brines at Silver Peak, Nevada, and from spodumene ore at Kings Mountain, North Carolina. The combined annual lithium carbonate production capacity at these two locations is 34 million pounds. Footo is the only company in the Free World producing lithium from brine sources. Footo's total lithium reserves, including its Chilean interests, are 462,200 tons of lithium, or 2,458,450 tons of lithium carbonate equivalents.

Pharmacy Topics By RAY JOYE

New system collects the blood a patient loses during surgery and after, filters it, and returns it to the patient. It was designed by a doctor at the San Jose Health Center in California.

Researchers at UCLA report that postmenopausal "hot flashes" are real-biochemical events in the brain that trigger bursts of hormones. Many doctors once claimed they were psychosomatic or imaginary.

In Kansas City, there's a special "hotline" for cancer patients. Volunteers offer emotional support, and specialists give no-charge second opinions.

Yale professor has tested a diaphragm "pacemaker"—a device that activates and controls the nerve impulses that produce breathing—with long-term success. Patients who could not otherwise breathe have worn the pacemaker for more than eight years.

Now being tested: a gold compound pill against arthritis. New formulation is said to do away with painful side effect of the pure metal, which is said to halt the progressive nature of the disease.

Warm wishes for a wonderful Christmas from the folks at Rays.
