TRUMAN SCORES HATE GROUPS

ST. LOUIS - Former President Harry S. Truman called for an increased effort by the American people "to eliminate injustice and to create a society which carries our ideals" in a filmed address here last week, Mr. Truman said that movements that were originally motivated by a, "desire for greater justice among men" had wavered and lost their way."

He further said that such movements "have become self-centered they have set up their own interests as the only standard of right and wrong and they have degenerated from movements of liberation into movements of tyranny and oppression."

Mr. Truman referred to such hate groups and bigots as "enemies" of the United States who sought to undermine democratic principles by creating racial and religious tensions. Names were not mentioned.
