Wilkins, who grew up in the Negro district of St. Paul, Minn., is a graduate of the university. He has held his present post since 1955.

In his acceptance speech, Wilkins said "America cannot afford today the continued denial of first-class citizenship to its Negro citizens."

"We cannot afford disfranchisement, withholding by trickery, intimidation and violence of the basic right to vote," he declared.

Langston Hughes, Negro author, poet and playwright, was presented with the NAACP's Spingarn Medal, the highest award for Negro achievement. NAACP President Arthur B. Spingarn said in making the award, "most of us believe him to be one of the most distinguished American Negro poets and the most beloved one."

Hughes accepted the medal "in the name of the people who have given me the materials out of which my poems and stories, plays and songs, have come."

"Without them," he said, "there would have been no poems, no dreams, no stories, no dramas without their music, no songs."

Refuses To Discuss His 'Mild' Stand

Former FBI Agent Terry Sanford refuses to credit his moderate stand on integration for his impressive victory over a staunch segregationist in Saturday's Democratic primary runoff for Governor of North Carolina.

"Of course, the northern press would like to play up the race issue as overshadowing all others," said the 42-year-old Fayetteville attorney. "We will not take this attitude. There were other issues."

Sanford, former campaign manager for the late U. S. Sen. Kerr Scott (D-NC), pegged his campaign on "a positive program of progress." He aimed that program at utilizing the state's booming economy for increased state spending in schools, industry, farms and highways.

But, in the final days of the campaign, the debate between Sanford and former State Asst. Atty. Gen. I. Beverly Lake centered mainly on North Carolina's approach to integration.

Sanford favored continuing the state's moderate approach, which has brought token public school integration in a number of Tar Heel cities while Lake sought to steer the state toward a "climate of opposition" to all forms of integration.

Sanford's victory was the first state-wide triumph for a moderate in a campaign in the South where segregation was a key issue. In most such elections within recent years a moderate label has been a handicap.

There's direct racial action at Albany, Ga., this week where the
