tute of Religion series, the minister, who led the sit-in movement in Nashville, said: "Non-violence is an invitation to dialogue between persons, a moment of trying to encounter people with the reality of racial alienation and separation."
A question and answer period followed the dynamic address.
In an interview with newsmen earlier in the day, he said desegregation is proceeding in Nashville, but a push to speed the process there will begin this week.
Rev. Lawson was expelled from the divinity school of Vanderbilt University. He was later reinstated, but had already entered Boston University where he received his degree. He now pastors the Scott Chapel Methodist Church in Shelbyville, Tenn.
While speaking on the non-violent racial struggle in the south, Rev. Lawson declared "People everywhere look upon it as a major opportunity for the renewal of western Christianity and Democracy."

"The sit-ins attempt to apply Christian love, integrity and decency to the problem of desegregation."
"The nation as a whole and, above all, the Christian church should take note of the prophetic aspect of non-violence," stated the minister.
Proceeding his address, many panel discussions were conducted. Following the Institute was a reception.

Odds-Ends

were deeply impressed however by one of the resources Mr. Lawson said could be developed to help break this long jam of bitterness and suspicion now existing between the races.

Mr. Lawson labeled this particular resource, "the invitation to dialogue." The speaker pointed to the fact that, particularly in the south, there has been no real communication between the races. The monologue has been the faction of conversation. By using this device the white man has done all the talking, has given all the orders, made all the laws and has been the only voice of authority in the land.

Mr. Lawson insisted that this old, tired, one-sided situation must be changed, "the monologue must give place to the dialogue," he said. Pointing to the fact that unless Negroes are allowed to express themselves, unless their views, their ideas, and their opinions are considered and used, the existing unrest and confusion will grow worse and finally get out of hand.

We hope that "the invitation to dialogue" will be accepted and speedily put into practice. Solution of problems comes from understanding. Understanding comes from knowing about people and things. The best way to know about people is to know people, to talk with them, to trade ideas and thoughts. The dialogue is a resource of unlimited possibilities if it is promptly and properly used.

Do you think North Carolina Public and State Schools should place more technically trained personnel in positions of educational leadership and precedent at this stage of her quest for industrialization?

MRS. ALMA HINTON, 1812 Charles St. — "There are many people who excel in the theory of education but fall short when it comes to application. The complex society in which we live is highly industrialized, and is becoming so more each day, especially here in North Carolina.
More emphasis is being placed on skill and technological training. Jobs are filled on the basis of technical skills. Thus, it becomes increasingly clear that technically trained people in education will help train more people for technical jobs and become an asset to our state."

REV. PAUL JOHNSON, 1000 E. Martin St. — "I think that a person who would have a position of precedence in our public or state schools should have some background in general education. People with technical training may make excellent educational leaders. I think it would be very helpful if some of these technically trained people were placed in office provided they had some general educational background, especially here in North Carolina."

DR. C. L. HUNT, 203 Pettigrew St. — "I think North Carolina should have more technically trained people on its consultant and advisory staffs instead of in direct light. I think that they would be more valuable as advisors and leave the supervising to the principals and superintendents."

REV. D. N. HOWARD, 617 Rosemont Ave. — "I do think that North Carolina should put more technically trained people in education. The knowledge that they give to the schools will help enrich the total life of the community and of the state. Of course I am assuming that these technical trained people will have some background in general education."

MR. HENRY DAVIS, 1008 Hadley Rd. — "I think that any trend in education will have to be gradually taken into consideration. Although the slogan for the year is 'The Quest for the New Frontier' it would not be necessary to place more technically trained people into office. Usually these people do not have the material."

MRS. M. W. RANDELL, 608 Hadley Rd. — "I think that they should have more technically trained people because if an improvement in the other system here in the state would mean improvement in our school system, I am for anything that will help improve our schools. The effect of a technically trained person in a school might all depend on the school. Some schools may be geared to the tactics of the technical system while others may not. However, I think that he should have some background in general education procedures."

But I have prayed for thee, that thy faith fail not; and when thou art converted, strengthen thy brethren.
—(St. Luke 23:32.)
Upon each one of us who, through Jesus the Redeemer, has been blessed by God, there rests the great responsibility of extending a helping hand to those who falter in darkness and in weakness in their quest for His grace, His love.

SCOTCH SHORT BREAD — It's between two hundred and two years since Robert Burns was born in a small cottage near the Firth of Clyde on a cold January 25th. But the heather still blooms on the hill, and highland heifers quicken at the beauty of the poet's words.
When we think of Robert Burns and the highlands, of the heather and the stone cottages of the country, we are reminded of the delicious short bread that comes to us from Scotland—a treat that tastes so good with a hot cup of coffee. You'll find this wonderful short bread a real conversation-maker at the next gathering of your club, community group, etc. It's simple to make and so tasty!

Reddy Says:

"in cold, wintry weather - you use more electricity."

Reddy knows that long, cold nights and sunless days can work him overtime because everyone has just one idea—keep warm and comfortable. And he likes to help you do exactly that.

But he also has a gentle reminder. Cold snaps call for more kilowatts than do summer months. The automatic furnace runs practically all the time. Your electric water heater must heat water that comes into the home at a much lower temperature. More hot meals and in-between snacks are prepared on your electric range and small appliances.

In fact you use more of just about everything electrical such as TV, lighting and electric space heaters. Naturally, the more Reddy works for you the more his services are reflected in your electric bill.

However — when the weather's roughest is when folks appreciate the comfort and convenience of electrical living. Take a peek around your home and then ask what else does so many things at such reasonable cost? It's still the biggest bargain in the family budget.
