DEAR SALLY

BY SALLY SHAW
DEAR SALLY: I was a widow with two children, a boy of 11 and a girl of 10, when I married my present husband a year ago. My present husband is a fine man, very devoted to me and to the children, and they are very fond of him.

But, because they loved their own father so much, they refuse to call their stepfather "Dad" or "Daddy", because they feel this is an endearing term they should reserve for their own father. As a result, they have been calling him by his first name. I don't feel right about this, and I'm sure he doesn't like it either, because it makes him feel like an outsider, when in reality he is performing all the functions of a real father to them. Do you have any suggestions on how this can be handled? MARGIE

DEAR MARGIE: Have a little heart-to-heart talk with the children, and tell them just what you have told me. Tell them it's all right to reserve the names, "Dad" or "Daddy", in memory of their real father, but why not call their stepfather "Pop"? It will make him happier — more a part of the family, which he surely is.

DEAR SALLY: How can I propose to this wonderful girl of mine? I'm such an awkward, bumbling guy. I've thought of the old medieval way of falling onto my knees, ring in hand, and reciting some piece of romantic poetry. And I've thought of whispering the words into her ear while we're watching a love story on the screen, or maybe while we're dancing to some sentimental lyric. But then I get cold feet, and just can't put any of these ideas into action. I love her very much, so how can I propose to her? IRISH

DEAR IRISH: Why don't you just turn on some soft music, and then speak these seven simple words: "I love you. Will you marry me?" This is an old tried-and-true approach that has been working for ages, and in many languages... and I'm sure it will work for you. Good luck.

DEAR SALLY: I have a close friend who has a very irritating habit. Whenever I wear something new that she likes, she'll say, "I love to have that when you're through with it." And she keeps hammering at me until I finally do promise to give it to her. It's become so that I get overly conscientious about it, and find myself giving her the articles long before I am really through with them. It isn't as though she were poor, because she really has more money than I do and could afford to buy better clothes than I. I suppose she's just being provident, but I'm feeling very much like a philanthropic patsy. How can I handle this situation? EASY MARK

DEAR EASY MARK: Easy. Henceforth, when she begins a campaign for one of your articles of clothing, simply come back with, "This I'll NEVER be through with. I intend to wear it until it falls apart." Then, of course, stick with it.

DEAR SALLY: My neighbor asked me if I knew that my husband was driving a 22-year-old redneck to work every morning. This girl lives on the same street as we do, and they work for the same compa-

Here are authoritative answers by the Veterans Administration to questions from former servicemen and their families.

Q—Members of the armed forces on active duty may be protected from lapse of commercial insurance policies by the VA under terms of the Soldiers and Sailors Civil Relief Act. Just what does it mean?

A—Once your commercial insurance policy is protected by the VA under these terms, it will not lapse or terminate for nonpayment of premiums while you are on active duty and for two years after your discharge, unless you request withdrawal of the protective provisions. If you do not pay the premiums and interest to your insurance company during the protective period, the amount due will be treated by the VA as a loan. If the cash surrender value of your policy at the end of the protective period is less than the amount guaranteed, the policy will terminate and the government will pay your insurance company the difference. Any sum paid the company by the VA will become your debt to the United States.

Q—I am a World War II veteran. Since I designated the beneficiary for my GI insurance, I have married and have two sons. How can I change my beneficiary and perhaps the option for payment to my beneficiary?

A—Write your VA Regional Office for form 9-336, "Change of Beneficiary and Election of Optional Settlement." Fill out the form and mail it to the insurance office to which you pay your GI insurance premiums.

Q—Will the VA guaranty a business loan where a veteran may purchase a boat to use in business, either fishing or the transportation of sightseeing tourists?

A—Yes, if the veteran can negotiate a loan to buy a boat as a business venture the VA is authorized to guaranty the lender against loss up to 50 percent of the loan with a maximum guaranty of $2,000 on non-real estate loans.

I told my neighbor that I knew about it and she said the wool was being pulled over my eyes and that my husband, like all men in their 40's, is easy prey for the young chicks. So I visited the girl's home one evening and, in front of her parents, told her she must find other transportation. They became very angry and told me to leave. Then when I told my husband how rude they had been, he blew his top, said I had humiliated him, and that I was way off the beam. Do you think it's wrong for a woman to do all she can to protect her home? AROUSED

DEAR AROUSED: You should have discussed this sensibly only with your husband — not with the girl and her family. Your gossipy neighbor will no doubt be delighted if she learns that she succeeded in goading you into being so assinine. I do hope—for the sake of your husband (and yourself) — you'll write a note of apology to the girl.

Policemen Harrass Pickets; Condone Mob Violence

RICHMOND, Ky.—"The action of local police in fraternizing with segregationist bystanders and failing to even reprimand those who violated our pickets' rights, tended to promote violence."

So charged Beatrice Huguely, chairman of Richmond CORE after Gerald Cunningham was beaten to the ground and Ronald Berry, a teen-ager was struck while picketing Collin's drugstore. Police made no attempt to stop the assault or to avert a repeat-performance. In fact, one policeman tried to incite a similar incident. Pointing to Julia Lewis of Lexington CORE, who was on the picket line, he encouraged two white bystanders to "get her and beat her up." When this assault failed to materialize, the police chief, himself, ordered her to get out of town in five minutes.

When one of the segregationists grabbed Mrs. Huguely's sign and destroyed it, police, instead of acting against him, ordered the picket dispersed. After the picketing, Rev. Daniel Harrison and Austin Sims, who had been CORE observers, were arrested on trumped-up charges of reckless driving.

There have also been brief sit-ins at the four stores. On one occasion, Mrs. Huguely and Ida Miller were arrested on breach-of-the-peace charges for refusing to leave Collin's lunch counter.
