

DEAR SALLY

BY SALLY SHAW

DEAR SALLY: I suppose there are lots of men, like my husband, who tend to become over-impressed with their "cuteness" and "romantic charm" when they get into their 50's. My 55-year-old man is constantly embarrassing me with his flirtatious manners towards everything female, and especially with my women friends whom I have in my home now and then for bridge parties. I've tried to laugh off his fresh remarks and "wolf-like" mannerisms towards my friends, but it's becoming more intolerable all the time, and I'm sure these women are beginning to dread visiting my home for fear of running up against my gray-haired Casanova. Can you give me any advice? IN A STEW.

DEAR IN A STEW: You can have it out with Casanova. Tell him how much he is hurting your feelings and embarrassing your friends, and appeal to his sense of right. If this does no good, about the only thing you can do is begin arranging your dates with your friends away from home, or else manage to have them in when you're sure he will be away.

DEAR SALLY: In former years, when I was employing sitters for my young children, I certainly never permitted any of them to invite their boy friends in to sit with them. But now I have just discovered that my 15-year-old daughter has been entertaining boys during her baby-sitting jobs in one particular home with the full consent of her employer. I am not trying to excuse my daughter, but don't you think the woman for whom she works should have checked with me first on this point? What shall I do—MRS. T.G.

DEAR MRS. T.G.: The employer is way out of line and, indeed, she need not have checked with you first in order to learn this setup is all wrong. Lay down the law to your daughter. Tell her positively no more sitting jobs unless she promises faithfully that she will sit these out alone!

DEAR SALLY: A buddy of mine went with a beautiful girl for several months, and then broke off. I asked him if he minded my dating her and when he said no, I began going with her, and she and I hit it off wonderfully right from the start. In fact she has told me she enjoys my company more than that of any other boys she's ever gone out with, and I know I'm falling hard for her. But now this buddy of mine keeps telling me will eventually come back to him, and that she's only going with me to make him jealous, and that she will eventually come back to him. I'm sure he's dead wrong about this. Should I tell him off? D.J.

DEAR D.J.: Some buddy! But what would you gain by telling him off? Time will decide this one. Your girl's subsequent actions will speak far more eloquently than any words from you or him.

DEAR SALLY: I'm a girl of 23 and have been going with a good-looking fellow of 24 for almost a year. We get along marvelously, and I enjoy our dates very much. There's only one bug in the ointment of my happiness. The only time he speaks any words of love to me or tells me that I'm the only girl in the world for him is when he has taken a drink or two over his quota. At these times he's voluble and eloquent about his great, undying love. Then later, when I remind him of the things he said to me, he'll look at me with a puzzled expression on his face and say, "Did I really say that? I really must have been loaded!" This, of course, hurts me very much. I have heard that it takes liquor in some cases to loosen a person's tongue and make him say the things that are really on his mind. Do you think this might be true in the case of this fellow, and that if I just bide my time, he will come out with expressions of love in a more rational way? WONDERING.

DEAR WONDERING: Now really! Can you seriously be interested in a man who has to drink too much in order to become romantic? A relationship like this isn't worth keeping up!

President Of Allen U. To FSC April 25

FAYETTEVILLE—Dr. Howard E. Wright, president of Allen University, Columbia, S. C., will be guest speaker for the annual Founders' Day observance at Fayetteville State College on Sunday, April 15 in Seabrook Auditorium.

President of the AMI-controlled Allen University since 1961, Dr. Wright formerly served as chairman of the department of psychology at North Carolina College at Durham.

Before this, President Wright was high school principal in Albany, Ga.; Logan, W. Va.; and Prairie View, Texas.

Later, he served as director of teacher training at Prairie View State College and chairman of the division of education and psychology at Texas Southern University.

REV. STANLEY AT BENNETT GREENSBORO—"Tell me what you weep about, and I can tell you who you are, the quality of your commitment and the firmness of your faith," the Rev. A. Knighton Stanley, instructor in religion, declared in his Passion Sunday message at Bennett College on Sunday.

During Reconstruction, a Negro was elected city judge in Selma, Alabama.

born recording group who are all set to cut in on some of the millions those British boys have been taking out of the country. Their first RCA-Victor recording, "Jungle Fever," is a hit, and they're taking off shortly for a cross-country concert tour that could gross half a million dollars for them. Personal manager Bil Cook, discoverer of Roy Hamilton, Sam Cooke and Brook Benton, signed the group after they trekked 1,000 miles from Georgia to his office in New York. The Beavers started north with five dollars between them and arrived at Cook's office with $2.50 left. Left to right: Calvin Kido, Willie Jones, Gombay Gombaba, James Oladiende and Herman Stephens.

Band, Orchestra Directors Ass'n Sets FSC Festival

FAYETTEVILLE — The North Carolina Band and Orchestra Directors Association will hold its 31st annual high school band and orchestra festival at Fayetteville State College on April 29 and 30. Approximately 75 bands which have earned high ratings at the four district festivals throughout the state are expected for the event.

Thomas B. Bacote, FSC band director and instructor in music, has been named state chairman for the festival.

A new type of GI insurance will be available May 1, 1965, to many disabled veterans who were originally eligible for NSLI insurance, in amounts from $1,000 to $10,000.
