

Yale Chaplain Morgan Orator

BALTIMORE, Md. — The Rev. William S. Coffin, chaplain at Yale University, spoke on "The Racial Problem — The Christian Prospective" at the Morgan State College Christian Council Dinner recently.

The Rev. Coffin, one of the original seven "Freedom Riders" whose conviction in 1961 to 30 days at hard labor was reversed by the U. S. Supreme Court, Monday, has been on the Morgan campus since Sunday as main speaker in the Religion in Life Program.

"Prejudice is universal and in one or more forms it is found in all of us," Mr. Coffin stated. He said the "roots of prejudice are deep and very hard to trace."

"Prejudice has to be understood in terms of man's insecurity. He needs redemption before education... not until the heart is in the right place can you begin to function..." he said.

The Rev. Mr. Coffin said that "you can't legislate morality, but you can regulate the conditions more conducive to morality."

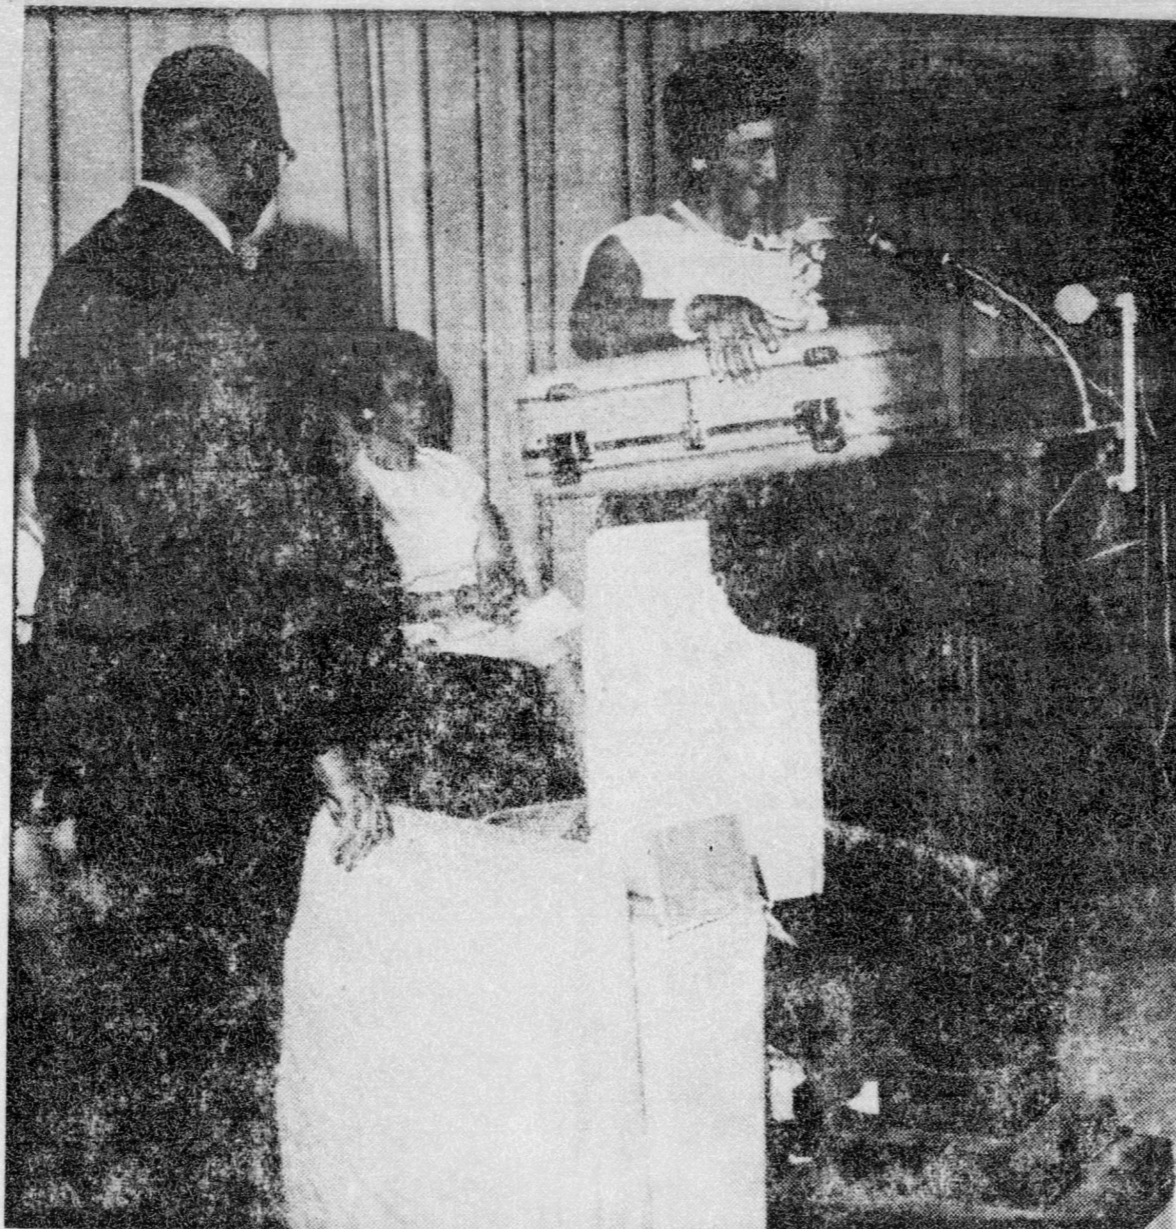

He compared his conviction by the Alabama Court on charge of "disturbing the peace" with the statements of gangster leader, Al Capone, who often said, "We don't want no trouble." (As long as someone else goes on paying.)

A new modified life insurance plan will be available to all GI term insurance policyholders after May 1, 1965. It will have a fixed premium which does not increase as does term insurance.

Banking in Braille

NEW YORK (CFN)—For the first time in the long history of banking, blind depositors can have as much privacy in handling checking accounts as sighted people.

This advance, for the benefit of blind people the world over, results from the invention of a device for writing checks in Braille and script, and also a system of rendering statements of account in Braille.

Keith M. Army, executive vice president of Chemical Bank New York Trust Company, seated, at left, opens the bank's initial checking account "in Braille" for Stanley Wartenburg, director of employment services of the New York Association for the Blind. Looking on are Wesley D. Sprague, executive director of the Association, left, and William S. Renard, president of the bank.

Inventor of the checkwriter is Norman Henderson, 34-year-old officer's assistant in the credit division of Chemical Bank New York Trust Company at 20 Pine Street, New York. An application has been filed by him with the U.S. Patent Office in Washington for a patent to be assigned to the bank.

It was two years ago, when a blind young woman student at the Julliard School of Music visited Chemical's office at 60th Street and Lexington Avenue, asking what the bank could do to help sightless people to write their own checks independently. Challenged to find a solution by Walter E. Finch, assistant vice president in charge of the office, Mr. Henderson busied himself at the nearby Lighthouse (New York Association for the Blind) to learn the tools of communication used by blind people.

Working closely with Thomas F. Gilmartin, blind administrator of training at the Lighthouse, "inventor" Henderson devised a dozen or so experimental check-writers. The most useful, as proven with several blind depositors, is a pair of hinged aluminum plates, with cutouts in the top one corresponding to the blank lines on a standard check and Braille cells for perforating other parts of a check. The device also has Braille cells for the check stub so the user can keep full records in Braille.

Chemical New York also has developed a system for rendering monthly statements to blind depositors in Braille. To facilitate the handling of such accounts a central bookkeeping department has been established at the 60th Street and Lexington Avenue office where the staff has mastered Braille reading and printing.

In announcing the Braille checkwriter, William S. Renard, president of the bank, said: "Chemical New York is pleased to offer the first opportunity for blind people to conduct their personal financial affairs with the same privacy available to sighted people. As a public service, we shall be glad to furnish the device at cost, exclusive of our development expense, to other banking institutions anywhere in the world."
