AT NASHVILLE: MORTON BODDIE GETS NAACP MEM-

NASHVILLE-It has been left for a 78 year old retired carpenter and Baptist deacon and Sunday Church School teacher to pace the local NAACP branch by getting more members to join and rejoin than any other person connected with the Nashville NAACP.

Morton Boddie goes about it quietly, but with earnestness, and he gets results. Mr. Boddie has been treasurer of this small town unit since it was chartered about five years ago. From the beginning he got more memberships than anyone else, often saving the branch's charter from revocation for like of the required number of members.

At the January 16th meeting, Boddie reported on thirty-two (32) memberships secured since January third-two weeks, and he did not get to see all his prospects, some of whom wait for him. Mr. Boddle expects to make it fifty renewals before Easter. His wife, Mrs. Ida Boddie, has headed the women's auxiliary of the chapter which has raised freedom fund money through sale of barbecue dinners, During 1965 the branch was able to pay $250 in the Mother's Day May rally in Raleigh. Mrs. Elvan A. Battle, an 85 year old resident and native of Edgecombe County, was fune-

The Phillips School PTA held its monthly meeting January 18 with a good attendance in the school library. Samuel Lyons, president, presided over the docket, which featured an address on registration and voting by J. B. Harren, area NAACP leader.

Harren urged that all citizens avail themselves of the use and power of the ballot in order to really become worthwhile citizens with a part in the running of their nation, The members were told of the chance to sell cucumbers through a cooperative to be manned by Negroes, the first of that kind in the county.

Principal J. E. Batts took the parents on a tour of the cafeteria which is about to open to provide lunches for the underprivileged pupils. Battsasked for contributions to supplement the federal and personal funds, stating many children are unable to pay.

You are escorted into the beautifully furnished private office of Stephen McLean, one of the city's foremost attorneys. Here you are met by his junior partner, Robert Ames, and the lovely young red-haired secretary, Catherine Thomas--both of them very distressed and worried looking. Your eyes travel to the body of the 65-year-old Stephen McLean, sprawled on the thick carpeting between his desk and one of the windows. There is a huge, ugly-looking bruise over his left temple.

"It all happened so suddenly," exclaims Catherine Thomas. "I don't know when I'll recover from the shock of it! He fell and struck his head on the edge of that table under the window. Maybe if his heart hadn't been so weak ... " "Will you give me the entire story from the beginning?"

you ask Robert Adams.

"Well, Mr. McLean was seated at his desk dictating some notes to Cathy when I entered his office here. I had some rather important questions to ask him regarding a new case we took on this week. But before I could get started with him, he seemed to turn pale, and a peculiar expression came over his face. He was in rather poor health...had suffered a couple of heart attacks during the past couple of years... and maybe he felt something of the sort coming on again. Anyway, he suddenly jumped up from his chair and started across the office towards that table under the window, muttering something about pills. There's a box of pills on the table," he adds, nodding his head in that direction, "Anyway ... I don't know what caused it ... but he stumbled and fell heavily, striking his head a sickening blow on the edge of the table. When I ran over to him, he was dead!"

You saunter over behind McLean's deak, giving a superficial glance at the papers scattered over it. Then you pull the chair out from under the desk to seat yourself and, pulling out the center draw, you note that the contents are very neatly--almost fastidiously--arranged..orderly rows of pencils, pens, a ruler, a paper knife, a few paper clips, and some postage stamps of various denomination. "How long have you been employed here?" you ask Catherine Thomas "Oh, I'm quite new here ... only about two weeks. I've been working for both Mr. McLean and Bob here ... but now ...

and she breaks into sobs. "Has either of you touched or moved anything at all in this office?" you ask.

"Nothing at all," replies Adams. "We knew right away that there was nothing we could do for Mr. McLean. And in fact, we didn't even use his phone to call you. We hurried to the outer office and used Cathy's phone, and then we waited there until you came." "Why didn't you call a doctor?"

"Oh ... we knew he was dead, and that there was nothing that could be done to help him. Maybe we should have, Adams shakes his head mournfully, 'I guess I wasn't thinking too clearly."

"I'm inclined to agree with you," you say. "You didn't think this out too clearly. This does not have the appearance of accidental death, and I'm taking both of you to headquarters with me for further questioning?"

SOLUTION

You were compelled to pull McLean's chair from under his desk in order to seat yourself. Yet, according to Adams' story, McLean jumped up suddenly from his desk--and if this had been so, his chair would surely have been pushed away from his desk. The first name basis between "Cathy" and "Bob" makes you suspicious, too.

SPIES GALORE

Gregory Peck, starring with Sophia Loren in Universal's "Arabesque," noted that Sean Connery was working on his new James Bond film in the same studio where Miss Loren was playing a Middle Eastern secret agent. "Bet we're the only place," he quipped, "with his and hers spies."

WELL NAMED The cast and crew of Universal's "Gunpoint," starring Audie Murphy and Joan Staley quickly found out where Rattlesnake Hill near St. George, Utah, got its name. On the first day of location filming, seven rattlers were killed.

COLLEGE COSTS

The average annual cost at a good private college in 1965 was about $2,500, and at a state university about $1,750. RESEARCH IN PRISONS

But 'what about those indifferent or disinterested toward the person, who may curiously come and be won into intelligence--if they don't already know the gist of the lecturer's say! And how about those among the former, not ordinarily impressed by the speaker or the topic, who would be cap-tured by the eloquence that the newsman did not expose? All but the first are often talked away, and, since the unreached are usually the most needy, we declare that too much foretelling makes a damaging difference.

Last week a Raleigh bank was robbed, and minutes later the public knew that a near-by window-washing Negro had collected and passed on to the police certain data that had led to the capture of the bandit. Yes, robbers are stupid, but some of too much! When policemen fail to get the co-operation of innocent, law-abiding citizens, it is almost always because the people know that the policemen will not protect them from the criminals they expose -- not even to the tune of a shut mouth! Sometimes an American military secret or other top security information leaks out, and American Intelligence e plains that that little scoop was intentionally dropped to test the intelligence of foreign intelligence. Well, most of us just aren't that intelligent!

In our nation's capital, in our congressional halls, human cobras protect their political images by filibustering, lying -causing Caucasian parasites to hold on just a little longer to that hopeless hope that Negroes can be permanently enslaved! This venomous deceit not only further intensifies the racial disorder; it also further disunites these ununited United States! They're talking democracy to death- They're talking America to hell!! At the present rate of things, Russia and Red China need but to wait a little while till America talks herself out of political and military existence. Thus, it is high time for the government and the people of this nation to decide what things shall be told for the people's information and what things shall be kept untold for the people's sake.
