Stop Talking, Begin Taking Moves To Remove Blight From Inner Areas

NEW YORK (NPI) - Government officials across the country stopped talking and started taking action to remove the blight of slums from their inner cities.

In New York, slum dwellers whose apartments lacked heat were put up at the Astor, one of the city's best-known hotels, at reduced rates. "I don't think this sort of thing has ever been done before," said Mrs. Ann Roberts, executive director of the city's economic opportunity committee.

The slum dwellers said some Harlem apartment in which they lived were so cold they could see smoke coming out of their mouths. The city was planning legal action against the landlords of these apartments. In Los Angeles, a plan was announced to lease 1,000 vacant apartments from private owners and sublease them to low-income families and senior citizens.

Following formal city council approval, the Housing Authority applied to the U. S. Housing and Home Finance agency for federal funds.

Moving low-income families into middle-class neighborhoods, said Miss Sylvia A. Yuster, housing authority chairman, will allow them to avoid the disadvantages of low-income housing developments.

J. Conyers Asks LBJ To Aid Persons Evicted From Farms

WASHINGTON - Congressman John Conyers, Jr. (Dem.-Michigan) has asked President Johnson to rush emergency assistance to "the hungry, the homeless and the helpless people" who have been evicted this winter from Mississippi plantations. In a letter sent to President Johnson on Saturday, Conyers cited a study by the Delta Ministry, an affiliate of the National Council of Churches, stating more than 10,000 members of Negro sharecropper and tenant farm families will be evicted by the end of the winter. Many of the evictions have occurred on plantations where there are strikes for better wages and working conditions. The average farm worker in the Mississippi Delta receives thirty to forty cents an hour. Earlier this week seventy evictees entered the shut-down Greenville Air Force Base asking for food, jobs and land, but were removed by military police. Terming it "heartless" to force these seventy people to leave the base without any effort being made to respond to their plea for help, Conyers suggested the base be used as a temporary housing and food distribution center. Some two hundred of those who had hoped to live at the base are now staying near-by in tents. The Greenville Air Force Base was deactivated a year ago and negotiations are now under way to have it used in the poverty program as a job restraining center.

"Equality of opportunity is made meaningful for the Negro by his inequality of condition, this is the conclusion reached by Bernard Harleston in an article entitled Higher Education for the Negro. The Rt. Rev. Thomas A. Fraser, Bishop of the Diocese of North Carolina, told his audience Sunday on the occasion of St. Augustine's College's Ninety-ninth anniversary celebration.

"The inequality of condition in the area of education is clearly spelled out by the vicious circle of poor high school education producing a poor student for a poor college education, which in turn produces a poor teacher qualified to continue the poor elementary education, and round and round we go in a vicious circle," stated the speaker.

"It is interesting to note that Negro institutions educate the majority of Negro students who go to college, and of the 123

ELLAVILLE, Ga. - A 14-year-old boy went on trial for his life on Feb. 14 because he killed a policeman who was hitting his brother with a club. Charlie Hunter shot Night Policeman John A. Hardin to death last Nov. 13 on a dirt road about a mile outside the Ellaville city limits. The boy said he feared that Hardin was about to kill his brother Willie, 19.

Judge T. O. Marshall, sitting as judge of Juvenile Court, turned the boy over to Superior Court for trial on a charge of first-degree murder. Marshall is also judge of Schley County Superior Court.

He was to preside at the trial of Charlie and Willie Hunter, who is also charged with murder. The state was expected to ask that the brothers be electrocuted.

Attorneys for the Hunters are challenging the system of jury selection in Schley County. They say that it results in the exclusion of Negroes, who make up 56 per cent of the population of the county.

Concerned citizens in Southwest Georgia have formed the Hunter Defense Committee to try to free the youths. Slater King, president of the Albany Movement, is chairman. He said the committee hopes to include persons in other parts of the nation who have voiced concern about the case.

King pointed out that Officer Hardin and another man stopped the Hunter brothers on the road outside Ellaville, although the policeman's authority did not extend beyond the city limits.

The man with Hardin was identified as Kermit O. Green, a foreman with the Georgia Highway Department who also acts as county jailer. Sheriff William Marcene Ellis testified WINSTON-SALEM - Both James Farmer, national director of the Congress of Racial Equality (until March 1), and John Lewis, national chairman of the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee, were guests on the campus of Winston-Salem State College last week.

Farmer was the vespers speaker, ushering in the observance of Negro History Week on the campus; and Lewis was the mid-week assembly orator. "What will be your reply when your grandchildren say to you 'What were you doing during the current civil rights revolution?'"

This question was posed by Mr. Farmer, of Racial Equality in a talk to the students of Winston-Salem State College last Sunday.

Reviewing Negro history during the past decade, he told how the Negro revolution began with the 1954 and 1955 U. S. Supreme Court decisions ending segregation in public education, continued through the Montgomery, Ala. bus boycott and gained momentum from the Feb. 1, 1960 sit-ins by three college

She suffered a laceration of the left side of the face, and abrasions.
