Segregation Challenged In Schools Of Beaufort Cnty

NEW BERN - NAACP Legal Defense and Educational Fund attorneys Thursday asked the Federal District Court here to order desegregation of Beaufort County Schools.

The Civil Rights lawyers complained that 26 pupils, who registered for desegregated classes under the school board's "freedom of choice" plan last year were subjected to threats, intimidations and harassment after the board made their names public.

Twelve of the 26 applicants either withdrew their applications for transfer or dropped out of school after assignment under the pressure of harassment, the complaint said.

Four Negro students who dropped out of school because they feared for their safety in the predominantly white schools to which they were assigned, were not allowed to transfer back to Negro schools because of a school board policy against such transfers, according to the complaint.

The Food Occupation Class at Ligon School carried out a special class project on Feb. 22. A George Washington Luncheon with creative ideas in food, table arrangement, color scheme and place cards.

Janet Richardson, Olivia Gregory, Henrietta Thomas and Shirley Williams were the hostesses. The class members observed and scored the groups as they worked. The meal was complete in one hour. Previous preparation was done by all class members.

The Luncheon was rated as attractive, colorful and tasty. The class was the tasty panel. In order to be able to carry out activities in a short time the food occupation class also made posters in a class poster contest for a food establishment idea. Maurice Debnam, James Davis and Shirley Williams made the most attractive posters with clever food ideas. They were each given a meal ticket to "eat out" at least once during the six-week period.

Students are observing in food establishments where large quantities of food are being prepared and served. Many activities are carried on in the laboratory with special experiences and observations.
