A&T Union HeadWorks For Start

GREENSBORO -- The new million dollar Memorial College Union, now under construction at A&T College, is not scheduled for completion until February, 1967, but its director is already on the job, working and planning.

Albert E. Smith, the new director who reported here for his duties in July, explains that a lot of planning and advance work goes into the opening and operation of a successful student union.

Until the opening of the fall semester, Smith will be busy selecting and buying furniture and equipment, drafting job specifications and selecting staff workers and planning on the organization of joint student-faculty union committees.

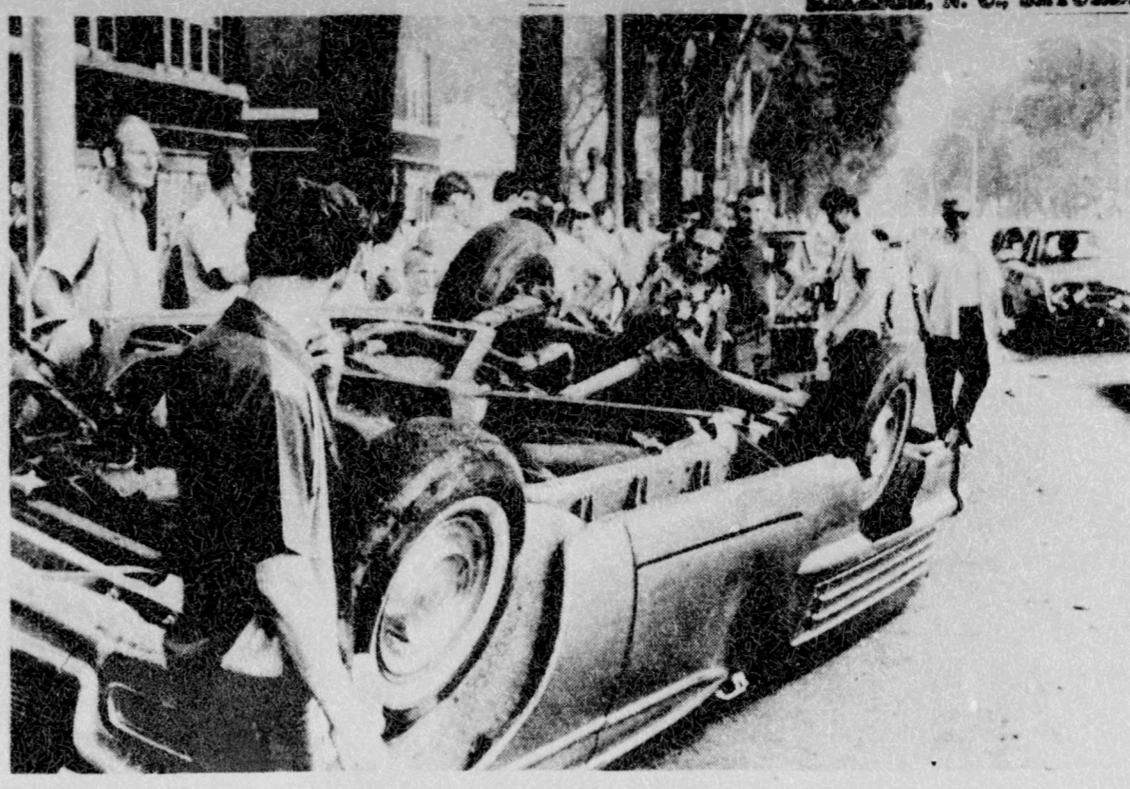

Smith explains, he has been working with "things," but when students arrive on September 12, his job takes on a brand new importance. "We will then begin to work with people, the real purpose for which the college union is established," he said.

When Smith talks about the role of the college union, he exudes high enthusiasm and confidence. He thinks of the union as the "one, big living room" for the college community, the center for social, recreational and informal educational activities, in which the total college community is involved, a setting for informal dialogue between students, faculty and guests.

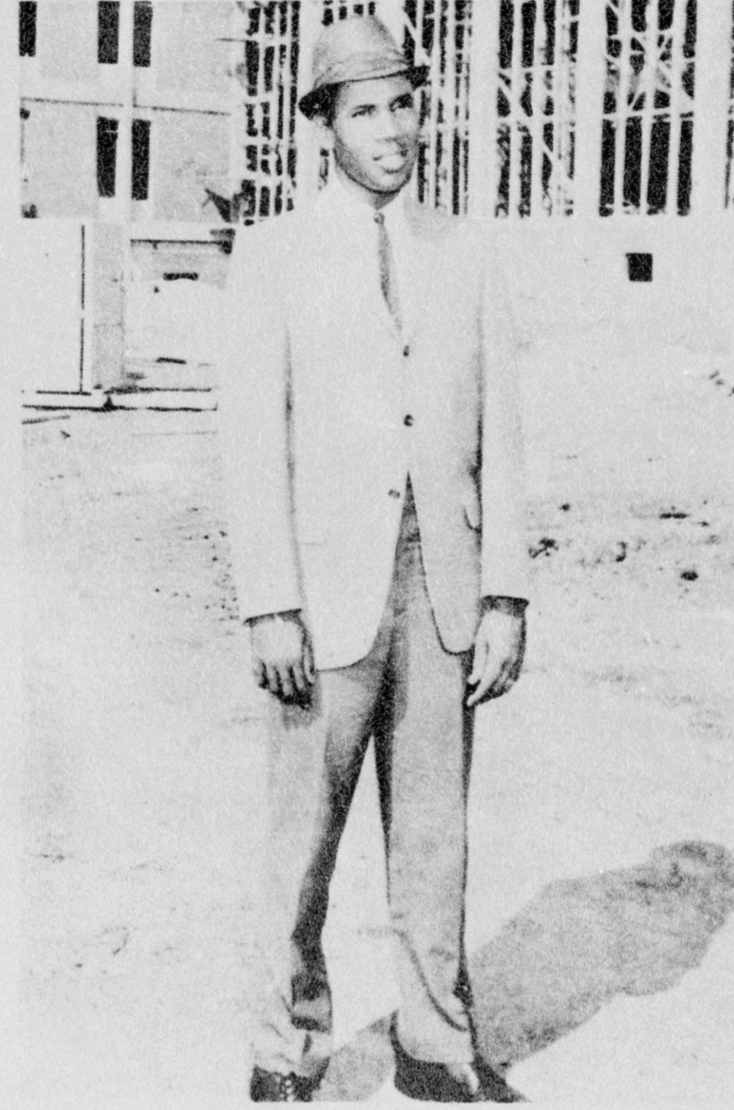

self. As you are finishing one point, take a quick glance at your outline, so that your remarks will lead naturally to the next point. This kind of approach makes for smoother transition of thought and is especially necessary where one point is meant to complement the next.

Too many people put their manuscript on note cards and read the words verbatim. This is not outlining, and it encourages reading every word. A speaker should formulate his sentences as he speaks and use the outline to keep him on the right track.

Saint Paul AME Zion Restored

HENDERSON - The restoration of Saint Paul AME Zion Church, located 2 and 1/2 miles from the city, through the efforts of Rev. M. L. Ward, pastor, and John Henderson, steward, is considered one of the outstanding feats accomplished in church circles, for sometime.

The dedication of a new edifice took place Sunday, August 28. The Rev. B. A. Mack, pastor, Kesler Temple, delivered the sermon. The event was highlighted with a dedicatory ritual which was read by Bishop W. A. Stewart.

Church people from throughout the area took part in the ceremony and Rev. Ward said had it not been for the cooperation she received from ministers and well-wishers the church would not have been built.

EVICTED

FORT LEE, N. J. -- Loray White, ex-model and showgirl and the former wife of entertainer Sammy Davis Jr., was evicted along with her present husband, Shepherd Myers, and 14-year-old daughter, Debbie, from her four-room apartment for non-payment of rent. Her financial situation is quite different than it was when she was Mrs. Sammy Davis for a brief span. Davis reportedly had married her for the "convenience" of avoiding adverse publicity centering on his alleged dating of movie star Kim Novak.

Allie Avant. An old fashion prayer meeting is slated for 7:00 p.m. Rev. W. W. Davis will preach the closing sermon, with music being furnished by a combined choir from Corinth Church.

NC's Public Game Lands Increased

Not many years ago, about half the people and nearly all hunters lived on farms or in small towns. Finding game was no great problem. The hunter could take his shotgun from its place over the mantle, step out the back door, whistle for his dog, and shoot a limit of birds on the back forty before the sun was up enough to melt the frost.

That day has passed. Much previously good hunting land has been put to industrial or agricultural use, has eroded, been leased, posted or sectioned by roads. This means that privately-owned land that supports game populations and is open to the public, will suffer from heavy hunting pressure, particularly land that is near metropolitan areas. There are few with the problem of finding a place to hunt.

North Carolina, however, has effectively moved to solve the problem. In 1964, the Wildlife Resources Commission adopted a resolution reaffirming its policy of making land available to the public for "hunting, fishing, and other compatible recreation purposes..." Presently the Commission owns, leases, or otherwise controls 656,488 acres of public hunting land. This, together with over 2,000 acres open to waterfowl hunting in the Federally-controlled Cape Hatteras National Seashore, plus some 20-odd commercial shooting preserves and such privately-owned lands as the 20,000 acres opened to hunting by the West Virginia Pulp and Paper Company in Bertie County goes a long way toward providing places to hunt.

Most of the acreage managed by the Commission is included in Wildlife Management Areas. The use of these areas had increased 435 per cent since 1950. This remarkable growth in public land utilization has been partially a result of increased population. In the 15-year period from 1950 to 1965, the number of North Carolinians increased 20.9 per cent. But numbers alone are not the whole story, because during the same 15-year period, hunting license sales rose 44.1 per cent. Last year there was a total of 64,460 visitor days hunting on 22 of the Commission's public areas. This amounts to 5 to 10 per cent of the total hunting in the State.

This growth in the number of hunters may be also accounted for by the increased prosperity and leisure time which characterize the years since the Korean War. Of course, hunting is not the only form of recreation which has grown in recent years. All forms of outdoor activities have mushroomed similarly. The Bureau of Outdoor Recreation, under the Department of the Interior, was created to help provide for the growing needs of a growing population looking for a clean campsite and an unpolluted lake where a few days may be spent away from the bustle of the city.

Wildlife officials expect public hunting land to carry an increasing load of the State's hunting pressure in future years.

An outline is almost a necessity if a speech is ten minutes or more long. The outline should cover the main points of your address, yet it should not be too detailed or you may become more interested in following the outline than in paying attention to your audience.
