BY ROY L, COLLINS

QUESTION: SHOULD PA-RENTS CHOOSE A COURSE FOR ITS CHILD OR LET THE CHILD CHOOSE ITS OWN CA-REER IN LIFE?

Mr. James Carrington, Smith Dr., Garner, N. C. A child should choose his own career because no parent should choose it for them. Every individual has the opportunity to have a chance to accomplish his own goal. If a child has a ca-CARRINGTON reer that he like to ask his parents aid they should give him full support concerning it, and not try to encourage him into a career that he is not sure about.

Mrs. Lela B. Collins, 229 New Rand Rd., Garner. N. C. I think that a child at its early age should have an ambition for the future and # he or she like it the parent should prepare a future to help the child attain his goal, A parent should also cooperate with COLLINS the children in whatever field in life they would like to be in and the child would be much happier.

Mr. William N. McClain, Rt. 3, Raleigh, N. C. Children at their high school age, I would say, should ask their counselor for his aid. They should always get a clear understanding of what career they want in life and should prepare at an early age MCCLAIN to attain their goal for a career that they like, and not one picked by their parents or anyone else. They should make two choices of a career and tell their parents while in school so that preparation can be made for the future.

Miss Wilma J. Collins, 400 Cannon St., Raleigh, N. C.

I think when a child get old enough, he or she should choose their own career. A child should know right from wrong, but some do not. If a parent choose a career for chil-dren it might be COLLINS a choice that the child may not like and they will not do a good job. But if they pick their own career, they will be much happier in life and if he or she makes a mistake they won't blame it on the parents. It will be their fault.

TRUE Don't worry if a rival imitates you. While he follows in your tracks he cannot pass

Fellows, if the politicians campaigning in your area fail to gain your interest or tend to lose it, there are several possible explanations, but it is most likely that you live -- as we do -in a district that lacks the right candidate. Perhaps we should vote for seniority, but we realize that the senior's philosophy caters well to the past, poorly to the present, and more poorly to the future. Maybe we should sponsor a new man for a new day; then it dawns upon us that the new day would not be so dark if so many old men had not been so foolish and so many young men were not so dumb!

Nevertheless, not having a favorite candidate is no excuse for not doing our patriotic duty. However, in our case, we don't look for the more desirable of the two--for that is neither: we find the more undesirable of the two and vote for his opponent. You see, the matter here is not who to vote for, but who to vote against.

We can come out of it with a mistake to head every office, but so long as we have to play guessing games, your guess is as good as anybody else's, so make them.

YOU ARE THE DETECTIVE

The body of the well-known financier, Thomas L. Whitney, sprawls lifeless on the thickly-carpeted floor near the desk in his home study, a bullet hole in his right temple. You stoop and carefully pick up the sheet of typewriter paper lying on the floor near the revolver beside the dead man. Holding the paper up to the light, you note from the watermark that it is of excellent quality, smoothly glazed, and uncreased. You then read the typewritten message on it:

"Dearest Tom: I just did not have the courage to face you with what I have to tell you -- hence this letter. Everything is over between us. I like you very much, but I don't love you enough to marry you. I have seen the tragedy of too many loveless marriages, and I can't have that happen to us. And so, it's goodbye. Please do not try to contact me in any effort to change my mind--it will do no good. Just remember me always as a good friend. Sincerely, E.G. Now you turn to the dead man's secretary, George Morgan, and ask for his story.

"In the first place," the young, dark-haired man begins, 'I cannot for the life of me understand why Mr. Whitney should have done away with himself this way. He was always full of good cheer and high spirits...an almost boyish kind of enthusiasm. Certainly, while I was with him earlier this afternoon, he gave no indication that anything was wrong. I opened the afternoon mail, as usual, and brought it to him here in his study. I had accidentally opened that personal letter you just finished examining, too ... I don't usually do that ... I remember apologizing to Mr. Whitney about it, even though of course I had not read it. Then, after giving him the mail, I left the house to go on an errand. I was away about an hour, and when I returned ... he was lying there on the floor ... dead!"

You look again at the "goodbye letter," which is still in "Do you happen to know who the 'E.G.' is who wrote this?" "Why, I imagine that would be Elaine Graham. She sings in television. She and Mr. Whitney have been going around rather regularly for the past several months.' Your eyes wander over the articles strewed about on the dead man's desk -- a pile of correspondence, a half-filled, charred pipe resting in a large glass ashtray, a mucilage jar, two magazines, and the morning newspaper. Then you wheel around again to Geroge Morgan, "The story you have told me is a very good one, but not quite good enough. There's one little flaw in it that makes me suspect you of knowing far more. than you have told me about this!"

What is that 'little flaw' that has aroused your suspicions?

SOLUTION

Although, according to George Morgan's story, the letter from 'E.G." had arrived with the other mail, you have noted that the sheet of typewriter paper was UNCREASED. Surely it would have been folded for mailing in an envelope!

Like a hobby with variety? Nothing offers more latitude than stamp collecting. Since postage stamps first appeared in 1840, more than 200,000 different types have been issued around the world Each of these may have hun dreds of varieties in terms of watermarks, perforations, paper, printing irregularities, or shades of color.

Philatelists (or stamp collectors) who are specialists collect all the varieties they can get in one series. But another - and less arduous - method is to collect one stamp of each

"This is known as semi-specialized collecting, a fascinat ing approach to the hobby." notes Ervin J. Felix, stamp editor at Whitman Publishing Company, Racine, Wisconsin.

For example, Great Britain and its colonies from 1850 to the present is a major philatelic category, containing several thousand different stamps A collection represents a miniature history of one of the world's greatest colonial empires. Some of these stamps are rarities, available only at premium prices. But many others can be found on mails. or purchased for nominal sums at your local stamp "From Queen Victoria to Queen Elizabeth, some of the great names and great events of British history are represented on the stamps." continues Felix, whose firm manufactures a new line of stamp albums and other philatelic supplies.

Other recommended areas for semi-specialized collecting are stamps of the Orient: stamps of Portugal and its colonies; Spain and colonies; France and colonies: The Netherlands; the Australasia group; and Slcandinavia.
