Policing KKK Rallies Expensive To Tax Payers

The policing of Ku Klux Klan rallies, civil rights activities and labor difficulties required 462 and one-half hours of the State Highway Patrol's time during October.

Major E. W. Jones, the Patrol's Director of Training and Inspection, estimated the cost of these non-highway duties at $2,483 based upon an hourly cost of $5.37 per trooper.

At least 22 Klan rallies and other activities were monitored by Patrolmen during the month at a cost of 308 and one-half man-hours.

Civil rights activities at Windsor and Roxboro took an additional 68 hours of the Patrol's time and labor difficulties at Haw River and King required an expenditure of 86 hours.

Jones said the time expended by Patrolmen in the policing activities amounted to 57 and three-fourths man-days. In order to guard against possible violence during the Klan, civil rights and labor disputes, Patrol Troopers must either work overtime or be called away from their regular highway duties.
