GREENSBORO -- Calling attention to the fact that "we are called upon to react to an everchanging environment," President Isaac H. Miller, Jr., told the Bennett College community on Monday that creative change may well mean the discarding of uncreative tradition.

In his second major address to the students and faculty, President Miller reminded them that "the events that guide our destines today are not the same as those that guided the destines of the founding fathers." He paid tribute to the historic past of Bennett, but hastened to add that 'all that we have to work with is today and the hope of tomorrow." "Do not be alraid of conflict and protest," he declar-ed, "but make them creative. Reckless and irresponsible protest must be guarded against. We must collectively create tradition of orderly disciplined change. Let us be a creator rather than a creature of a new society."
