

CROSBY'S CORNER

STUDENTS VISIT BUILDINGS

The fifth-year students of Crosby-Garfield School were given an opportunity to see the lawmakers of our State in action. We visited sessions of both the Senate and the House.

All of the bills taken up in the Senate were non-debatable, so we didn't get a chance to hear any heated discussion. The recorder in the Senate sounded like a man at a tobacco auction.

In the House of Representatives, the men had desks like first, second, and third graders. We looked for Rep. Frye, but didn't see him.

We left the State House and visited the North Carolina State Library Commission and Archives Building. This building has not yet been completed. There were many antique relics there, such as spinning wheels, weaving machines, coaches, and horseless buggies.

Two blocks over, we trekked to the State Capitol Building. We were seated in the House chambers and Mr. Locklear told us many interesting, historical facts about the building.

All in all, we had an eventful and informational trip. Reporter, Liteta Y. Lewis.

LINKS SPONSOR TRIP

High standards in class participation and special scientific interests causes ten students to be selected from rooms 315, 316, and 317 to take a trip to the planetarium at Chapel Hill.

The lucky level five students were Donna Stallings, Jacquelyn Chavis, Denise Wiggins, Adriene Williams, Jerry Newsome, Gladys Sanders, Donald Lyons, Glenda Atkinson, Garland Lyons, and Gary Smith.

The trip was so fun-packed as well as such a wonderful learning experience that the pupils didn't mind writing letters of appreciation as part of a language art activity.

Hats off to the Raleigh Links for making this trip possible. Reporter, Lois Guess.

DISAPPOINTMENT

The eggs that were reported to be hatched are not going to be.

Ronald A. Griffiths accidentally dropped some reading books on the incubator and cracked the eggs.

We let the eggs stay in the incubator a week or two. Then they began to smell. Our teacher told someone to cut the eggs open. They had stopped developing when they were cracked.

It is a good thing we had not decided on names. Remember: "Never count your chicken - ah - I mean - ducks - before they hatch." Reporter, Andraeese Jones.

DUCKINGS REPLACED BY FROG

The disappointment at the loss of the expected ducklings was somewhat softened by the gift of a frog given to Lauren M. Jones by her mother, who teaches biology. This amphibian, who now floats in formaldehyde, was endeared himself to the population of room 315. Reporter, Adriene Williams.

THE RATTLING COCOON

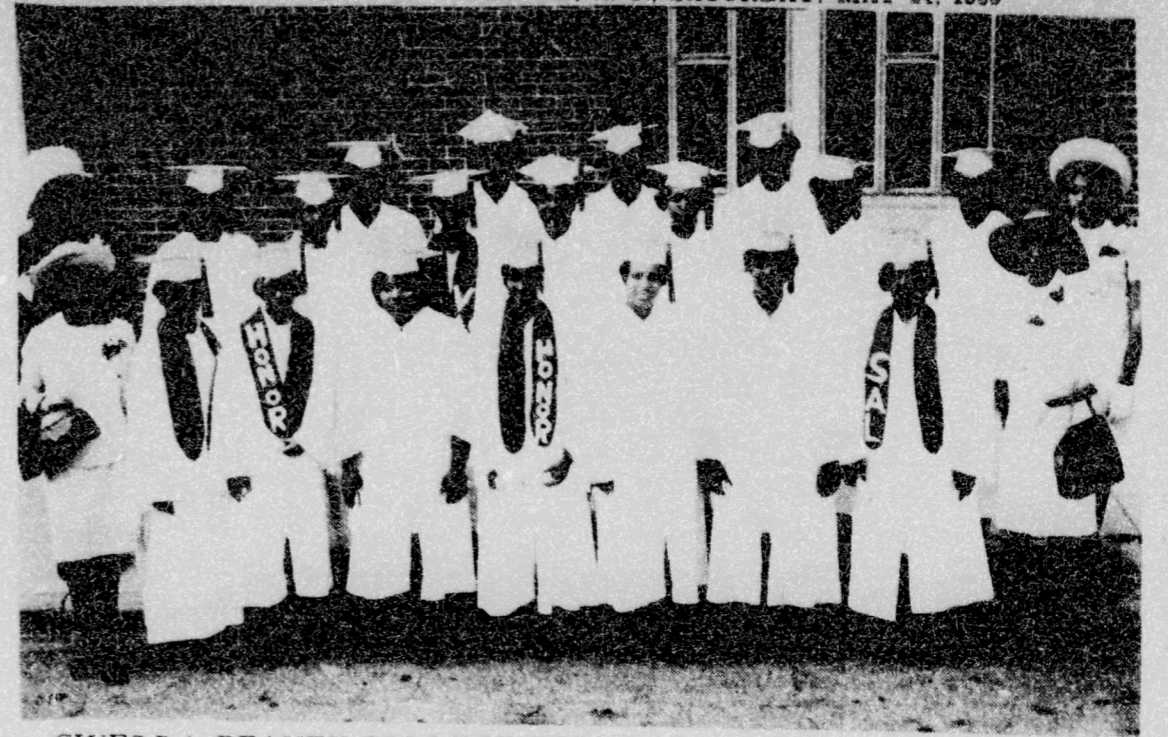

A 5th level class at Crosby-Garfield School has a butterfly cocoon. The cocoon has a crackling sound. Marshall Butler brought the cocoon. The boys thought that the cocoon was dead, but a few days later the class found out that the cocoon was alive. Reporter, Donna Renee Stallings.
