

CP&L's Generator Set For Wilmington

WILMINGTON - Carolina Power & Light Company is planning to install a 420,000 kilowatt generator at a cost of approximately $48 million at the Louis V. Sutton Plant near Wilmington.

Announcement of southeastern North Carolina's newest industrial expansion was made this morning by Shearon Harris, president of CP&L, at a breakfast meeting attended by Wilmington and New Hanover County officials.

Scheduled for operation in the spring of 1972, the new unit will burn either oil or coal, Harris said. It would require about one million tons of coal or four million barrels of oil annually.

Preliminary work at the site will begin within a few days. Up to 370 workers will be required at times of peak construction. Brown and Root, Houston-based firm, is architect, engineer and constructor for the job.

Completion of this third generating unit will bring maximum capacity of the Sutton Plant to 726,000 kilowatts. The plant now has 55 employees, and the expansion will create only a few additional jobs, Harris observed.

He said the expansion will strengthen the reliability of electric service in the greater Wilmington area where demand on the Company's system has increased 4-1/2 times since 1952.

ABC-TV 'Movie Of The Week To Introduce Young Bahamian

BY ROSE F. McARDLE

NASSAU, Bahamas—Less than two weeks ago, 13-year-old Tyrone Stuart was pleasantly pursuing a summertime job as bread boy, serving bread and rolls in the dining room, at the Paradise Island Hotel and Villas.

Today, he's a neophyte actor performing a speaking -- and swimming -- role in a full-length motion picture currently being filmed here and in the Out Islands. With wisdom beyond his years, however, Tyrone has prudently taken a leave of absence from the hotel until his movie chores are completed. He admits making movies is fun, but it can't be counted on as a full-time career. Not yet, anyway.

For his role as Jason in "Deep Water Gold," Tyrone has a small amount of dialogue to deliver. He also appears in several swimming and diving sequences. Already an accomplished swimmer, he was unfamiliar with acting or SCUBA diving, and had to be instructed in both.

"He's coming along very well with dialogue; he learns quickly," says producer-director Alan Landsburg who coaches him on the set as his scenes come up.

SCUBA instructor Noah Meeks, of nearby Fort Lauderdale, Fla., also praises him for his progress in SCUBA diving. "He familiarized himself with 'buddy breathing' (two people breathing from one tank) in a few days, and is rapidly learning the more intricate workings of SCUBA techniques."

Swimming was responsible for Tyrone being "discovered." It was while he was swimming off Paradise Island some two weeks ago that Mrs. Sally Landsburg, wife of the Metro-media Producers Corporation producer-director, saw him and thought he might fill the then-uncast role of Jason in the feature-length movie. After being interviewed, along with several other youngsters, "Ty" was selected for his first film role.

In the film, Ty plays a SCUBA "bum," a lad who likes the water and makes his living in and around it. He role has proved a blessing in disguise, the youngster admits, because "I always wanted to dive but though the tank and SCUBA lessons would cost too much."

The quick transition from toting a tray to toting a SCUBA tank hasn't had a noticeable effect upon Ty, a student who will be entering Form II at St. Augustine's College next fall. He's eager to learn and totally undaunted by the presence of such Hollywood stars as Ricardo Montalban, Keir Dullea, Lana Wood and Aron Klacald. Bradford Dillman and France Nuyen are also slated to appear in the film, but are not here at the present time.

Ty finds the lessons more recreational than educational. He is aware, however, of the hazards inherent in breaking them. "Always exhale on the way up," he repeats after his instructor, "because the lungs could burst if you don't."
