Priorities Are Set For New Program

WASHINGTON, D. C. - The nation's program to help poor families become homeowners has a new set of social priorities, and FHA field offices now have more decision-making power to meet the program goals.

The liberalized changes were revealed in St. Louis by William B. Ross, Acting Assistant Secretary for Mortgage Credit of the U. S. Department of Housing and Urban Development and Acting Commissioner of the Federal Housing Administration.

Mr. Ross told the National Association of Real Estate Brokers, Inc., that HUD and FHA have decentralized the year-old program to give FHA's 75 district insuring offices full say-so on which projects shall receive Federal funds to help low-income buyers pay for their homes.

At the same time, he told the Negro Realists at their annual convention, district directors have been given a set of guidelines to follow to make sure that important social objectives will be achieved. He indicated the scope of the program by stating that nearly 210,000 lower income families could buy homes by use of $70 million of Federal funds already in hand and $100 million more the administration has requested for the current fiscal year.

Commissioner Ross said FHA field directors:

Must give priority of projects most likely to get under way fast.

Must look for projects that will further Fair Housing purposes.

Must make sure some funds will rehabilitate older housing in city cores.

Must favor projects that offer training and job opportunities for area residents.

Must seek projects that give minority businessmen a piece of the action.

Must work with major and other local, state, and national groups to use homeownership funds to provide housing as needed in Model Cities, urban renewal, and other related programs.

Program funds help the home buyers by covering all but the first 1 percent of interest on their 7 1/2 percent FHA-insured mortgage loans. Generally, the families who get this assistance can have incomes no more than 37 percent above the income of those poor enough to enter public housing projects.

Congress enacted this interest supplement program last year and gave FHA $25 million to start it off. Those funds were quickly committed at the national and regional level to help nearly 30,000 families buy homes. About 7,500 are already in their houses.

It's not money that causes so much trouble, but the misconception that alot of it can be had for nothing.

One trouble with the world is that there are too many people who do no work.
