Elections Offer Many Opportunities For Blacks

Attitudes Of Voters Checked

BY ALEXANDER BARNES

The CAROLINIAN made a spot survey of the attitude of the black vote as it relates to the Nov. 3 election, just before it went to press, in the 4th district congressional race, Wednesday. It found that there is still the state of apathy on the part of the black vote and much of it had not made up its mind.

The survey showed that the black vote could liberate itself from machine politics and could command the respect of both party leaders if it decided to flex its muscles. It was definitely decided that should the black vote take a close look at incumbent 4th district congressman, Nick Galifianakis' voting record on matters pertaining to social legislation, it would be to its best interest to vote for Jack Hawke, not necessarily as a pro-Hawke vote, but an anti-Galifianakis vote.

Many black Democrats recalled the fact that the black vote had saved Galifianakis in (See ELECTIONS, P. 2)

$500,000 To Referral From Ford

NEW YORK - The National Scholarship Service and Fund for Negro Students, the only national organization of its kind offering a college referral service, geared specifically for black students at no charge to the student, has received a $500,000 grant from the Ford Foundation.

The grant, said NSSFS executive director David Kent, will be used to broaden counseling and placement services for thousands of black high school students interested in post-secondary education. "By eliminating our application requirement of test scores and grade averages, we hope to counsel more black students this year than ever before," Kent stressed.

Last year, NSSFS counseled some 18,000 students. This year, however, through major modifications in its counseling scheme and a nationwide recruitment drive, the organization (See $500,000, P. 2)

Claim Cops Up In Arms

A glance at unrest throughout America and the world gives one a picture that policemen are up in arms. On Saturday an army of them converged on Washington and, in no uncertain terms, said that something had to be done about the way their comrades were being treated.

In Durham, the black cops, rose up in holy horror and told the City Council they were tired of the discriminatory practices, practiced on them.

There were differences of opinion about the Washington meeting. There were those who said that when cops began getting some of the things that they had been displaying on civilians, some of them innocent, they began hollering to the heavens. Washington is said to be studying the national situation.

It is apparent that the Durham group is fed up and has become very persistent. The grievances were presented last week and they were right back to the City Council Monday night to ascertain what had been done. City Manager L. Harding Hughes, told the City Council that he had nothing to report, even though he received the complaint sometime ago. This did not set so well with some members of the council. There were those who said many of the grievances could be dealt with then. Hughes asked that he be given until November 2 to make a progress report.

Lt. James Samuels spoke to the council Monday on behalf of the cops. (See CLAIM COPS, P. 2)

Negotiation Attempts Are Thwarted

BY MILTON COLEMAN

GREENSBORO - Blind Black workers at Skilcraft Industries for the Blind here took to the streets last week after the company's board of directors snubbed their attempts to negotiate longstanding grievances.

Skilcraft, which employs about 150 persons--ninety per cent of them blind and well over half of them Black--has been cited by the workers over the past four years for its unfair, discriminatory and exploitative work conditions. The workers have continually sought in vain to meet with company officials. They have been backed in their demands by a number of groups and influential individuals in the Black community.

Early last month, a group of respected and influential Black community members, including several ministers and civic leaders, toured the Skilcraft plant. At a press conference, a spokesman for the group revealed to newsmen that the committee was "appalled at the working conditions, the over-
