Goodloe Says Join Top Money

DURHAM-In his report to the policyowners of the North Carolina Mutual Life Insurance Company at their Seventy-second Annual Meeting here at Mutual Plaza in Durham, Monday afternoon, the firm's sixth president, Joseph W. Goodloe stated, "Now that both the life insurance industry and the nation's economy are rated in Trillion Dollar terms, it is imperative that North Carolina Mutual and other black-operated companies move up to the billion dollar league if we are to fulfill our role and responsibility to black people.

"Our record for 1970," he continued, "seems at first glance to provide a source of pride and pleasure in our accomplishment. True, the past year's record was the best in more than twenty years and ranks among the best, if not the best, in the Company's seventy-two year history. But, as we take a good hard look at the size and state of our economy, the size of the insurance industry, the magnitude of the demands for human investment as well as monetary investment needs, (See GOODLOE, P. 2)

Better Schools Headquarters Open In City

School building and renovation have not kept pace with the exploding student population in Wake County, County Board of Commissioners Waverly Aldis said Friday, Jan. 8, at the opening of the Better Schools Headquarters in Raleigh.

"In many schools, our children are in 1972," (UPI).

Cops Get Kids Out Of House

Severe frostbite on both the legs and arms of three Raleigh children attested to the fact that they had been abused and neglected here last Saturday. Their 29-year-old intoxicated mother, Mrs. Lizzie Surles, 1013 Mark Street, was arrested and charged with child abuse and neglect.

Officers C. S. Carter and H. W. Haywood were called to the scene at 11:46 p.m. by Herman Miles, who resides at 924 S. Blount Street.

Mr. Miles told the cops that three small children, ages six, three and ten months, were left alone and needed to be checked on.

The officers went to the Mark Street address and found Junior Surles, ten months old; William Carl Surles, age six; and Walter Surles, age 3, alone in the house.

There was no heat in the residence and several window panes were out. The youngest child was lying on a couch, near an open window. He was taken to Wake Memorial Hospital, where he was treated in the emergency room and placed in the hospital in fair condition.

The two other children were placed in the care of the Wake County Welfare Department.

A warrant was signed by the Officers and Mrs. Surles was later located in the 1100 block of Mark Street, very intoxicated. She told the officers that she had left the house at about 10:30 a.m. to find someone to repair her heater.

The woman was placed in Wake County Jail under a bond of $500 for her appearance in Wake District Court on Thursday, Jan. 21 at 2 p.m.

Later, the two older children were placed in the home of the complainant, Mr. Miles.

Mrs. Karen Johnson of the Welfare Department was notified. (See CHILD ABUSE, P. 2)

Says Current Indian Uprising Was Caused By Black Militance

NASHVILLE, Tenn.-Sparked in part by increasing militance among blacks, a modern-day Indian uprising is now in progress, challenging not only white racism, but the whole spectrum of western European values on which the country is founded.

That is the finding of a 15-page report released last week by the Race Relations Information Center (RRIC), a private journalistic research organization.

The report, prepared after four months of research and interviews by RRIC staff writer Frye Gaillard, says, "The thrust of the Indian movement is toward an increasingly militant assertion of traditional Indian values in a modern conflict-laden situation."

A number of Indians, Gaillard found, "believe that many of the ancient lessons of their people are applicable in 20th Century America, and some even believe the survival of the country is dependent upon non-Indians learning from the example of America's first inhabitants."

The Indian movement, according to the report, confronts white America with the contentions that "the Anglo-Saxon heritage may be suicide; that blind reliance on technology may be deadly; that the concept of radically improving on what nature has provided may be foolish; and that the arrogant assumption of a manifest destiny may yet catch up with the most powerful nation on earth."

The report, entitled "Indians in Revolt-1970," quotes a young Navajo named Charles Cambridge, who maintains: "The white man simply has not developed the philosophical and cultural sophistication to control the technology he has created. Now that technology controls him, and if something isn't done, it may destroy everybody."

Many Indians, according to Gaillard, believe that American definition of growth and progress are at the root of environmental pollution, and that the ecological crisis is so acute the planet may become uninhabitable unless white people and institutions change. "The white man needs to learn the simple things from Indians, such as how to live in harmony with what God has given him," Buffalo Tiger of the Miccosukee tribe said.

A respect for the "spiritual significance and limited life-giving resources" of the earth and an appreciation of the importance of tribal or group identity are the two things Indians believe they have to teach their conquerors.

Gaillard examined in detail a current assault against the lifestyle of the ancient Cochiti Pueblo in Northern New Mexico. The Pueblo's culture is one of the oldest in the western hemisphere, dating back thousands of years. But it is now in jeopardy because a Colorado-based development firm known as Great Western Cities is building a resort city of 50,000 people on Cochiti land.

According to the report, the resort is being built after power. (See INDIAN, P. 2)
