NCCU's Home Economics Building To Be Named For Miss Diana Dent

DURHAM - North Carolina Central University's home economics building will be dedicated on Friday, November 5, as the Diana S. Dent Building in honor of the chairman of the department from 1938 to 1960. Miss Dent, who makes her home in her birthplace, Louisburg, N. C., will return to the N. C. Central campus for the ceremonies. Under her leadership, the department of home economics, was moved to what was then North Carolina College from Winston-Salem State Teachers College, expanded from three rooms in the basement of the university's administration building to two new buildings, completed in 1954. The larger of those buildings is the one which will be named in her honor. The other is the university's Home Management House.

Dent's leadership, North Carolina College was the only Negro institution in the state of North Carolina approved for the preparation of vocational home economics teachers. During her tenure as chairman, the department established a nursery school program, now a minor in child development. As part of the ceremonies honoring Miss Dent, the department of home economics will reactivate the Diana S. Dent Educational Fund, established in Miss Dent's honor in 1960.

Hirohito

In his recent worldwide tour Emperor Hirohito of Japan was met by hostility in several countries. Some Englishmen of prominence refused invitations to Buckingham Palace for a reception in his honor.

In Holland his reception was even chillier; many Dutchmen remembered that he was titular head of state when Japanese seized the Dutch East Indies (now Indonesia) from Holland. Veterans in many countries recalling Japanese atrocities in World War II, protested Hirohito's visit for this reason.

Japanese treatment of Allied prisoners of war from 1941 to 1945 was indeed scandalous. Many prisoners were executed. Others died because of physical mistreatment. Many starved.
