

Are Your Child's Fears Normal?

NEW YORK — "Does your child have fears? He should," says an article in the current issue of Weight Watchers magazine, "as this is a normal part of growing up."

"The child who is game to try anything and everything, completely without fear, is just as emotionally disturbed as the child who harbors fears until they paralyze him" explains the article.

In trying to determine whether a child's fears are normal or abnormal, the Weight Watchers feature offers a set of questions prepared by Dr. Milton J. Senn, an authority on child behavior, to analyze a child's reactions.

SARAH REMOND
"Abolition Orator"

In the 1850's, there came upon the scene an intelligent, educated, and attractive Negro woman who was destined to make herself famous in anti-slavery crusades. She was Sarah Remond, sister of Charles Remond, a leading abolitionist who preceded Frederick Douglass. Sarah was no doubt influenced to become an agent of the American Anti-Slavery Society by her brother.

First, the Remonds spoke in upper New York State area where they received heckling racial penalties; so they transferred to the Mid-West.

In 1859-1860, Sarah Remond toured Ireland, Scotland, and England under auspices of British Mannsmission societies. Handbills announced her arrival to large cities. Journals praised her for logical construction of address, dulcet-toned voice, poise, appropriate vocabulary, and well-out phrases.

British audiences donated monies to be sent to America to aid Anti-Slavery societies. She aimed to create sympathy for American slaves.

Environmental Education Program Gains Wide Approval

FAYETTEVILLE — Fayetteville State University's Environmental Educational Program has been approved for funding for the '71-'72 academic year. Dr. E. Walton Jones, Acting Administrative Dean for the University Extension, North Carolina State University and project director, Environmental Education Program for North Carolina, has announced.

Fayetteville State University will conduct a project aimed at educating the citizens of the Greater Fayetteville-Cumberland area on the effects of the pollution on the water quality and how to arouse policy-making and the general public to do something about the problem.

FSU plans to conduct bi-monthly meetings with various service clubs and organizations; seminar group sessions with students — both collegiate and high school; workshops for in-service public school teachers and key community leaders; and summer institutions for pre-college and in-service teachers.

Persons interested in Fayetteville State University's Environmental Educational Program and other Environmental projects may contact Mrs. C. B. Huff at the university.
