Ben Ruffin, who is serving as chairman of the human relations committee for the Martin Luther King Games, along with Rev. Phillip Cousin, had nothing but praise for the local businesses who thought enough of the children to sacrifice donations to make it possible for them to see the meet. "As a result of the deep concern by the local business- es, children from throughout North Carolina will be able to see the meet Saturday. This is one of the best things that could have happened for these youngsters," Ruffin stated Saturday.

Dr. L. T. Walker, meet co-ordinator for the meet, joined Ruffin in praising the local businesses for their concern. "I know as a result of the donations made by these businesses, some children will be able to come to the meet," the veteran track coach stated.

Six of the businesses made large contributions toward the development of the meet and as a result they will have an event named in their honor. A representative from these businesses is expected to be on hand to make the presentations of the awards in the special events named in their honor.

Coca-Cola will sponsor the 900-yard run, Mutual Savings and Loan the 100-yard dashes, Mechanics and Farmers Bank the mile relay, IBM, the 40-yard hurdles, Burroughs- Welcome the 40-yard dash and NCNB the one mile run.

The stage is set for the 5th annual Martin Luther King International Freedom Games. Some 36 olympians are scheduled to participate in the one-day meet. A new track has been installed at the Wallace Wade Stadium and the new electronic device will be used to time the events. But some of the biggest winners at Wallace Wade Stadium Saturday will be the 8,000 children who will have their dreams fulfilled as a result of some of the local businesses in the Research Triangle area because they have stepped forward and said "someone really cares about you."

coordinators. The duties of each were outlined and discussed.

Mrs. Rhonda McLean, staff development coordinator, presented and explained all materials that were recently presented by LINC in Greensboro. Included in these sessions were topics relative to head-start philosophy, curriculum, staffing, objectives and the 5 options for innovations.

Mrs. Rebecca Whitley, health coordinator, discussed various health areas. She explored the importance of these objectives:

- 1. To help the child place a positive value on himself;
2. To help the child place a positive value on his family; and
3. To help the child place a positive value on his future and to realize that he has one thing he is preparing for.

An evaluation sheet was passed to each participant. This was done to help in future planning of workshops.

The informal workshop was useful, interesting, informative and enjoyed by all who attended.

Warning that he was pulling his impeachment resolution out of the dust. Conyers said he didn't believe it would be a long, hot summer because of the poverty cutbacks.

"Anybody who believes they can accomplish what we did in 1967 by taking to the streets will find their peace in heaven very quickly," Conyers said. "because of the readiness of the federal and state governments to cope with any street demonstration. They've got the plan and you won't be taking them by surprise either, they'll be waiting for you," he continued.

U.S. District Judge William

B. Jones, who earlier had ruled that only Congress could phase out a program it had mandated and funded, refused to postpone his April 11 order pending possible appeal.

The Nixon administration, claiming it had not decided whether to appeal the decision or not, had requested a stay. But the judge ruled that his order "is clear as to its scope and effect."

Asking Jones to permit the Administration to proceed with the scheduled April 28 closing of 10 regional OEO offices and the shifting of some programs to other agencies, the Justice Department said the decision to close those offices was made in light of "sound management, economy and the efficiency of the federal service."

They said the injunction should be amended to allow OEO Acting Director Howard Phillips to "proceed to effect such delegations and managerial decisions." But the judge rejected both motions.

In his original order, the judge said he was prohibiting "the defendant Phillips from taking certain actions and requires the defendant to take other actions."

This year, the runner-up, in each division will receive a $100.00 savings bond. This means that more branches will participate. Many of the branches have several mothers working. The mother that is named "Mother of the Year", in each branch, will go to Raleigh, on May 20, and enter the competition for the 1973 N.C. Mother.

Congressman Mitchell, Sr., chief lobbyist for the NAACP, is expected to give an up-to-the-minute report on what Congress is doing and expected to do about the plight of minorities.

A contingent of POWs will be on hand and tell of their experiences, along with a detachment of marines from Camp Lejeune. Each branch is urged to bring at least one bus load. Special music will be turned on. The battle cry is "On To Raleigh."

president of Shaw's National Alumni Association, Clark received a standing ovation from more than 300 persons of both races present. Following are excerpts of his address:

I wish to make clear my position on integrating the black college campus, which is my position for integrating the whole of the American society. I do not believe that any minority will ever realize its full potential to develop academically, socially, and economically in a segregated system as exists in our nation.

My position is that the solution for blacks to move into the so-called mainstream of the American way of life is to become an integral part, in every facet, of the American system, however, I hasten to add that the kind of integration I speak of involves recognizing each and every American for the contribution he makes to better the American way of life and helping the deprived and underprivileged to overcome the obstacles that prevent them from full participation so that they may rise to a level that allows them to contribute to and share in the many opportunities that are so near, but yet so far away. Again, we recognize the ever-present paradox.

As I profess my stand for a fully integrated American society, I also believe that there is still a need for some black institutions of higher learning. So yet again, the paradox shows itself.

The black institutions I speak of are not to be centers for preaching and teaching race hatred. The basic educational approach would be that of any good college or university, but coupled with an emphasis in humanistic discipline, dedication to purpose and achievement, a desire to care and share, along with a compassion and concern for the family of man. Yes, the paradox still stands.

I register this attitude because I do not believe that at this moment in the history of the American blacks that they are ready, in masses, to fully develop in a strictly integrated academic community. Whether we face it or not, far too many black students, due to the ravages of past and present segregation, do not possess the reading skills, the skills of basic mathematics, nor the discipline to compete in an environment of vicious competition that is far too often characteristic of so-called white education. Again I make clear the point that those blacks who are capable of excelling in the predominantly white institutions or in the predominantly black institution that is rapidly becoming a peoples institution could still matriculate there if such is his choice. I speak not of racism, but of realism.

My thinking is that without such an alternative, black leadership, which now leaves much to be desired, will be reduced to a sub-threshold level. There will be a diminution, in time, in black medical doctors, dentists, lawyers, businessmen, and in all professional areas in which blacks are few in number at the present.

My hope would be that this kind of approach would not necessarily last forever, since I would like to envision the day that as black children receive a good education and fair treatment in the integrated public school system and, most importantly, as the hearts of men change so as to accept and treat all men as brothers, we can all live as children of God. But until such time, I propose the aforementioned alternative.

Some moments ago, I suggested that funds to establish and support some all-black colleges and universities in America should come from black people. I suggest this because I feel that in an effort of this sort, a person would identify more with the efforts to excel and the achievements to be expected if he is intimately involved in this way. I would expect him to receive a real meaning of racial pride and the beauty of being black than many probably feel by simply extending the black hand-shake, giving the closed-fist salute, or espousing the joy of being black, while at the same time selling dope and drugs to the black youth, living life as if it were one big party that ends tonight, and not taking advantage of those educational opportunities that have been available for the past few years.

in 1971, and William C. Grant, a zoology graduate, who was awarded his Ph.D. a year ago.

Leaning back in her swivel chair, grasping a cup of coffee, Mrs. Henderson took time out from teaching, research, attending class and studying to look back over the first 26 years of her life. Nothing in her gestures or speech hinted of pride in her own accomplishments. But in her voice and actions it was apparent that Nannette Henderson knows where she has been, how she got where she is today and where the future leads. About her was an air of confidence combined with a deep sense of gratitude to those who supported her along the way.

SOLIDARITY

The nearly 100 participants heard NAMCU officials emphasize the importance of solidarity as the primary means of helping minorities to join the mainstream of American society.

"We (minorities) need to join in a collective effort in order to be more effective as businessmen," declared Samuel E. Harris, NAMCU's chairman of the board, "then we can speak out on the issues that are relevant to Black and poor people with force and tell it like it is."

Harris noted that blacks, browns, and other minorities have constantly "missed out" in the past in bidding for lucrative contracts from both the private and public sectors.

However, he explained, this pattern can not continue if the future if minority businesses are to share in the wealth of this nation and, eventually, act as decision-makers in helping to set national policy.

According to Harris, this spells out NAMCU's objective, a group of minority businessmen "pulling together in terms of economics to get on with nation building." However, he added, in the process of attaining economic self-sufficiency, NAMCU and its membership must continue to recognize "a commitment to remain relevant to the needs and aspirations of minority communities."

Two administration officials, addressing the NAMCU closing banquet, promised continued support for minority businesses in this country and offered a challenge to members of NAMCU and the conference to vigorously attempt to gain a piece of the action.

They were H. R. Crawford, the newly-appointed assistant secretary for Housing Management at the Department of Housing and Urban Development, and Robert H. Marik, assistant secretary for Administration and Management at the Department of Health, Education and Welfare.

Reiterating the solidarity theme which had been emphasized throughout the day, Crawford said that minorities - if they hope to be successful - must alter their past philosophy of individuality and work collectively to obtain common goals.

"We (minorities) must start sharing with each other," the housing official said. "We must stop being so critical of each other. We've got to start pushing each other" and working together towards our common goal - being a part of, and not apart from, where the action is.

Marik, who has served in the HEW post since last Decem ber, said there is "a new team at HEW now" and that "changes are coming" to that agency. He noted that services and power are currently undergoing a decentralization process, which means that minorities and others will have more access to Federal funds because they will have more contacts with state and local officials who dispense those funds than with federal officials in Washington.

The two-day conference was funded by the Commerce Department's Office of Minority Business Enterprise (OMBE), which, in 1969, helped found NAMCU. The group of minority consultants seeks to work as a collective body to ameliorate and expand the technical expertise and viability of its membership in an effort to competitively bid for contracts from both the federal government and private industry.

Feltonville

BY MARY MOSS

FELTONVILLE - Sunday School opened at the usual hour at Felton Grove Baptist with Bro. Charles in charge and Miss Gloria Blackmon as secretary. The subject of the lesson was Christ Makes Men New. No doubt it was a wonderful lesson.

At 11 a.m., the pastor, Rev. E. H. Thompson, delivered the morning message. His text was found in the book of Timothy the 4th chapter. He used for a theme I Have A Charge To Keep. It was a touching message, God really used him.

Our visitors were Miss Powell, Rev. Henry Brown and family from Raleigh. Rev. Brown made a wonderful talk. We like to say to Rev. Brown, we bid you God's speed to go on. You are welcome to worship with us on each first, second and third Sundays at Felton Grove Church.

On the second Sunday at 11 a.m., the Felton Grove Church members are invited to Oak Grove Church. Our sick this week include Bro. John Cozart, Bro. James Percell, Bro. E. Harris and Bro. Latimore. Our prayers go out for them.

Happy birthday to those who celebrate birthdays this week. Visitors were very few in Feltonville this week. They were Mrs. Gerlene Adwater and children from Fuquay, Mrs. Genny Bell Jones from Washington, D.C. and others from Duncan and Apex.

The Women's Club is still holding on and keeping the faith. We still meet on Saturdays at 3 o'clock, but since the time has changed, we will start meeting at night. We will be meeting at the home of Mrs. Henry on our next meeting.

The Feltonville Rams baseball team played at home Saturday. They defeated Holly Springs. It was a good day for the boys. They had barbeque, also. Next Saturday, they will be at home again and will play a team from Raleigh. The members of the team are having lots of fun.

Everyone is enjoying the trash man. You who haven't seen him and want him to pick up your garbage call 362-7233 for further information.

I shall name a few of our good friends in Feltonville: Mrs. Pauline Harris, Mrs. Louise Wilson, Mrs. Louise Jones, Mrs. Barbara Blackman, Miss Tynie Latimore and Mrs. Alice Petty.
