

Harvard Dean Warns Against Racial Incidents

BOSTON, Mass. (AP)—The dean of Harvard College has warned students that anyone involved in racial incidents faces expulsion and other disciplinary measures, but says his comments are general and not provoked by any particular incident.

"In dealing with situations where harassment, discrimination or insensitivity come to light, the college is ready to respond firmly and with appropriate actions," Dean Alfred Jewett said in an open letter to the Harvard community.

"In cases where physical harassment of students by other members of the community occurs, there is a general principle that the harasser should be asked to leave the community," said the letter, published recently by the student newspaper, the Harvard Crimson.

The letter was issued a week after minority students at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst took over a campus building to protest campus racism. The students left the building after meeting with the school chancellor.

In a telephone interview, Jewett said the letter was issued to lay down principles in the wake of deliberations with a committee on racial relations that was set up last year.

Harvard and the committee of students and faculty members decided to "come out with a series of messages that would alert the community to problems that might exist and do exist in some communities," Jewett said. "Mine is the first statement."

Four white students were expelled for a year last fall after frozen fruit was hurled at a black student, who later received several racially derogatory telephone calls.

Jewett said, "We have had no major things" outside of that incident. The decision to issue the open letter was made later, in December, but its publication was postponed until after exams.

The Crimson said questions of racism were raised earlier this month after students alleged that a professor made unspecified disparaging comments about blacks and Indians during a course called "The Peopling of America."

Harvard officials who asked to remain anonymous said they were aware of the allegations but said no investigation would be made unless a formal complaint was made.

Harvard College, made up of Harvard University's undergraduate institutions, has an enrollment of 6,400.

MONEY MATTERS

Making the money to put food on the table and keep a roof over the family's head is only part of the job.

Children and adults also have needs for affection, emotional security and a sense of achievement, says Dr. Leo Hawkins, extension human development specialist at NCSU.

"One of the greatest mistakes many parents make is using money to show approval or to mete out punishment," Dr. Hawkins says. Parents who do this are, in effect, making money a substitute for love and a bribe for cooperation.

Children get the wrong ideas about the purpose of money. "They develop an extreme exaggeration of the meaning of money as a symbol of love or hate," he says.

Parent-child relationships may become very strained when young people spend money on things their parents disapprove of. But they are actually "measuring their parents' values and standards while seeking to find their own," Dr. Hawkins says.

"The difficult task of that parents face is to give young people a reasonable amount of control and support at the same time," Dr. Hawkins says.

FRIED EELS?

Seafood agents at the NCSU Seafood Lab at Morehead City are known for promoting the use of unusual species of fish. If you are the adventurous type, you may want to sample their recipe for Pan Fried Eel. Brown a clove of garlic in 1/3 cup of olive oil. Cut 1 1/2 pounds eels into 2-inch thick pieces. Dip the eel in flour and fry until brown, 10 to 15 minutes per side. Drain on paper towels. Salt lightly and serve with lemon. Serves 2 to 3 people.
