$1 million loan from the federal government to renovate Cheshire Building. Once that renovation is complete, it will house the academic business department, giving students majoring in various fields of business and business administration a modern facility in which to study and work.

Robinson said he expects the outdoor track and field facility to be completed in time for spring use. The $400,000 facility will be available not only to the St. Augustine's College family but to the community as well, through a joint program with the college and the City of Raleigh.

Robinson said another grant from the Lily Foundation will allow the college to complete the final phase of building to the Fine Arts Center complex. The new wing will house the radio and low-power television station, and the academic communications program. Once matched, he said that the grant will total more than $1 million.

Also in the planning stages is the building of a new indoor educational athletic facility, that will house an indoor swimming pool, an indoor track, basketball, volleyball courts, that will seat 3,000 to 4,000 persons, and classroom facilities.

Robinson urged incoming freshmen to be serious about their education. He calls education the key to a brighter future for America.

"You must work as if demons were at your heels," he said, "to make sure you are prepared to face our ever-changing society."

more than 90,000 miles. Some of the places she visited included sites in Canada, the Caribbean, Europe, Central and South America, India and the Middle East. Vivian stated that business is mixed and she enjoys the opportunity to work for foreign trade organizations, to work directly with government representatives, and to work with the private sector in different countries.

In an interview, Ms. Logan stated that her most rewarding experience with Motors Tarde was the role she played in the development and negotiation of a trade agreement which resulted in the formulation of a joint-venture company in Jamaica.

In her present position, she is involved in the identification and sourcing of a variety of commodities from foreign countries that in many instances are directly consumed by General Motors divisions and suppliers.

Some of her current projects include sourcing of metals such as aluminum, ferrochrome, manganese, plastics, leather goods and textiles. These items will be purchased by South America, Turkey and countries in the Middle East.

This young woman is a life member of the NAACP, a member of the World Trade Club of Detroit, a member of the National Council of Negro Women, and a member of the Detroit Chapter of the United Nations. In fact, she was appointed by Detroit's mayor to serve as chairman of this group.

Ms. Logan attended St. Monica's Catholic School in Raleigh where she achieved a high scholastic average. This writer takes pride in reflecting on those days when Vivian participated in the Girl Scout troop at St. Monica's under her direction. From there, she attended J.W. Ligon Junior-Senior High School, where she continued to do well.

Ms. Logan is the daughter of the late Eugene Logan, Jr. and Hazel N. Logan of Raleigh. Her mother recently retired from the Wake County School System, where she served as a counselor and assistant principal. Vivian has two brothers, Eugene, III and Gregory.

At this point, Green filed charges with the state personnel commission and with EEOC. The commission ruled that Green should be transferred from his Orange County post to a similar job in Wake County when a vacancy occurred. The commission further said that Green had been discriminated against when he was passed over after a vacancy occurred.

Meanwhile, a second white male was hired by DMV Enforcement in Wake County. The exact date of this hiring could not be determined at press time. However, in May of 1987, NCDOT entered into an agreement with EEOC, one portion of which reads: "Department of Transportation strongly supports and will comply with such federal law in all aspects and it will not take any action against employees because they have exercised their rights under the law by filing charges with the U.S. Equal Employment Opportunity Commission."

The CAROLINIAN attempted to contact Stahl, DMV enforcement director, to determine the status of Green's case. We were told he was out of town, and the assistant director, Wade Anders, was not able to provide any information on the case. Instead, The CAROLINIAN was referred to the N.C. Attorney General's office to a Ms. Jane Gray, who also was "out of town."

Green, with a favorable court ruling in his hands directing that he be allowed to "transfer to the first Law Enforcement I vacancy in Wake County which occurs following the effective date of the decision, and that Mr. Green's legal fees be paid," still has not been transferred at press time, and as of Oct. 17 filed yet another charge of discrimination with EEOC naming the N.C. Department of Transportation, Division of Motor Vehicles Enforcement Section as the party discriminating against him.

SHOOTING INCIDENT
Two young men were shot, one in the leg and the other in the foot, in an incident around midnight Friday at the corner of Oakwood Avenue and Tarboro Road. The two unidentified victims were treated for minor injuries at Wake Medical Center. Authorities are searching for a yellow car that fled the scene of the incident at high speed.

POLICE SEARCH
Eva Gail Harrelson, 32, was found dead with a gunshot wound to her head behind the BTO Service Station on Ramsey Street earlier this week. Detectives were still searching for the killer of the woman, who worked as a clerk in the station, as of Friday. Detectives were also seeking two men who shot and wounded a clerk at a Cumberland County store around midnight Thursday.

The second incident took place at the Pantry on Murchison Road. The store clerk, Narell McLean, was shot in the left hand during an attempted holdup. McLean was treated at a local hospital and released.

FOUND SLAIN
Two Indians were found slain in a Robeson County motel early Tuesday. Both men were employees at the motel, and both had been shot with a .35 caliber handgun. One victim's throat had been slit.

The victims, Timothy Oxendine, 23, and Roger Strickland, 26, were found at the Rowland Motel on U.S. 301 by a passerby who noticed the door ajar and went to check it.

The men lived and worked at the motel, which is located in the southwestern section of Robeson County in the town of Rowland. Authorities investigating the case think that robbery may have been the motive behind the slayings, stating that an undisclosed amount of cash was missing.

brutal intimidation—even murder—were used to deprive blacks of the vote.

Finally, in 1965, President Lyndon B. Johnson issued a charter of political freedom for black Americans when he signed the Voting Rights Act, which he had asked Congress to pass in his famed "We Shall Overcome" speech of March 15, 1965.

It was against a backdrop of toil and terror that blacks struggled to gain the right to vote. Bodies were broken. Blood was shed. That grim history ought to impel every black American to vote at every opportunity.

I understand that this election campaign has been a turnout for many voters. Instead of sober debate about serious issues, the voters have been given a festival of irrelevancy.

Many black voters are dispirited because of the political fate of Rev. Jesse Jackson.

All these concerns are understandable. But they are not sufficient reason to refrain from voting.

It would be an insult to the memory of Medgar Evers, Jimmy Lee Jackson and other martyrs of the struggle for black Americans to stay at home on Election Day.

It would be an insult to the lives and work of James Weldon Johnson, Walter White, Roy Wilkins, Martin Luther King, Jr. and others for black Americans to fail to vote.

And it is an insult to Jesse Jackson, who is encouraging a massive black turnout, for black Americans to stay away from the polls.

DON'T BE A NON-VOTER.
VOTE! BE HEARD!

FOR PRESIDENT

personal bias, personal preference and sentiment before the provisions of the Constitution and its intent to impartially balance individual rights with the public good.

Dukakis, on the other hand, says "No," even to himself, when he knows the Constitution must prevail. It must be upheld. Dukakis is very clear on this, as he is equally clear in his position against waging war that is undeclared by Congress (the Constitution provides that only Congress shall declare war) and trading arms for hostages.

I remember another Democrat, Lyndon Johnson, who used to address us as "My fellow Americans," in that slow Southern drawl, but he made good on his words by envisioning the Great Society and lending his advocacy to the Civil Rights and Voting Rights Acts.

Bush doesn't even pretend to acknowledge the needs of all people in this country. His position against the Civil Rights Restoration Act, the Equal Rights Amendment, affirmative action, advance notification of plant closings and layoffs, and his favoring of a nominee for the Supreme Court who would have unabashedly set back more than 30 years of civil rights legislation all tell the sad story of Bush's flagrant disregard for liberty, general welfare and domestic tranquility of the people of the United States.

Bush fails to comprehend the people-centeredness of our Constitution, as he fails to understand the implications of the pledge of allegiance. He is no advocate of the people. I believe Dukakis is an advocate of the people.

Are you looking for a president who would be someone "you'd like to share a beer with," as someone suggested? Or are you looking for a president who demands high ethical standards of himself, of his appointees and his administration? In commenting that "Sleeze is neither a liberal nor a conservative problem," Bush seems to dismiss it as an acceptable condition within government. Is this good enough for a president? Dukakis thinks not. He believes virtue should be demonstrated at the top.

What about seriousness versus likableness? Do you want a likable president sitting around sipping beer, telling you everything is all right when nuclear waste is being dumped in communities, poorly built and maintained nuclear plants are threatening to blow up in the cities, AIDS is spreading unchecked across the nation as are drugs across our borders, foreign investment and connections are taking over our jobs and institutions, pollutants are making our air and water unfit to breathe and drink, overdevelopment is raping our lands, and the homeless lie in our streets? Dukakis says he's concerned about all that. Bush says yes, but... "We have 1,000 points of light."

When it comes right down to it, all we have are our Constitution, our people, and a serious and deliberative process by which to carry on the business of the people and the business of the people in relationship with the peoples of the world. And if any candidate fails on these points of advocacy, he should not be granted the privilege and honor of assuming the office of president of the United States.

SUPERSTAR BANK

insurance Co. The location for the new bank had been suggested to Fitzgerald by John Merrick, one of the original incorporators, who was also president of the insurance company.

Today, out of 14,000 banks that were surveyed, Mechanics and Farmers is ranked among the top 175 institutions that are "safe for you to keep your money."

Senior Vice President and City Executive of the Raleigh Office Stanley Green said that they have "always known that the performance of the bank has been excellent based on its portfolio of loans and investments. However, to be recognized by Money Magazine as a prestigious and stable institution is something very special." He credits the employees with being sensitive and flexible to their customers' needs.

Green said, "We will stay abreast of market trends and conditions through continuous training, workshops, seminars and listening to our customers and attempt to anticipate growth that the economy dictates."

Green said the bank has not lost sight of the original philosophy under which it was founded and its primary goal will continue to be to provide the best possible service to its customers and to assist them with their financial needs.

Superstar banks "are all highly profitable, consistent performers," the survey said. "There was no decline in their equity quarter to quarter and no drastic changes in their liquidity."

"They don't compete for deposits with especially high interest rates. The reason: their regular customers bring them all the business they want. Therefore, for example, the average six-month CD from a superstar bank yields seven percent, compared with the national average of 7.4 percent," the report concluded.

Veribanc, a Woburn, Mass., research firm, measured 14,000 banks against extremely stringent criteria. Then, Money, with the help of Bank Rate Monitor, surveyed the six largest "superstars," where available, in each state. The list was pared to 175, based on the banks' asset size and the number of services they offered, while ensuring that all states with superstars were represented.
