Tornadoes Bring Death And $100 Million Property Loss

From CAROLINIAN Staff Reports
Death and devastation followed early Monday morning in the wake of one of the most vicious tornadoes to touch down in Raleigh.
What was initially presumed to be more than one tornado was later identified to be a single storm, according to meteorologists and other weather specialists.
Scientists said that the tornado did not just sweep a path, but jumped around, wreaking havoc and destruction and giving the appearance that there were several storms that hit the area at once.
The National Weather Service, located at Raleigh-Durham International Airport, could not give any advance notice of the approaching storm due to equipment problems. By the time the problems were corrected it was too late. The storm was at that time destroying lives, demolishing homes, stores and trees with such force and fury that afterward it appeared that bombs had been dropped.

During a press conference Wednesday, Mayor Avery Upchurch outlined the status of the damage left by the tornado and presented a five-point relief program.
The program includes:
• Clean-up of debris from the public right of way.
• Police protection of damaged property.

• Providing special permits to enter the area (the permit office is located at 212 W. Hargett St).
• Making a detailed damage assessment.
• Taking steps to secure state and federal financial assistance.
As the storm raged across the state it left more than 500 residents homeless. Further, it is estimated that damages will exceed $100 million in the Wake area alone. Gov. Martin has indicated that he will ask the president to declare these areas a disaster area to get federal funds to begin rebuilding.
In talking to some residents and workers of Pleasant Valley, one per- (See TORNADO, P. 2)

SEEKING SHELTER—The Crawford family was the last family to leave the emergency shelter set up by the Red Cross at Martin Middle School after their home, located on Deleman Drive off Six Forks Road behind Celebration Mall was destroyed by the tornado on Monday. The family of six was moving to a hotel in Raleigh until further arrangements could be made for them. (Photo by Talib Sabir-Calloway)

Man Shot In Chavis Heights

Gunman Escapes Victim's Wallet Stolen

On Sunday around 9:49 p.m., Ronald Leon Smith of 6 Brunswick Way was walking on Chavis Way when a black male fired one shot into his stomach and took Smith's wallet from his pocket, fleeing on foot.
Smith was able to walk about 75 feet to his grandmother's house at 8 Granville Terrace. The assailant has been described as a tall black male with a two-to-three-day beard wearing a black coat. So far, police officials have been unable to get a complete description of the suspect. Smith is said to be in satisfactory condition in a local hospital. The incident took place in the Chavis Heights housing complex just off East Lenoir Street.

In related events: Wednesday morning after opening the store at 10 a.m., Carlisle Jewelers, located on the lower level of Crabtree Valley Mall, was robbed. Police reports state that two black males were involved. One of the men was described as 6'1" to 6'4" and was carrying a gun under his coat. The other was 5'9" to 5'11" wearing a brown coat or sweater.
While the gunman held everyone in the store at bay, the shorter robber broke the glass case holding Rolex watches. The watches taken are estimated to be worth as much as $100,000 in total value. The two men then left through a rear exit.

BY JESSE L. JACKSON
Special To The CAROLINIAN
When presidential candidate George Bush said, "Read my lips," he had one great advantage over Americans of color—the American people were able to hear and understand him (whether they believed him on taxes is another question).
When American leaders of color have spoken in clear and articulate terms, too often white America and its leadership could not read their lips. They could not or would not understand, in large part, because of racial stereotypes.
There are five stereotypes which consciously or subconsciously govern how most black people are judged by much of white America. Blacks, for the most part, are projected by the media as less intelligent, less hard-working, less patriotic, less universal and more violent than whites. Every move a black person makes carries the burden of these stereotypes.

Just three days ago a newspaper editorialized about my leadership role and the future of the Democratic Party. It said, "His new role puts Mr. Jackson and his wacky, far-left notions at the very heart of the party." The Quayle family-owned Arizona Republic, most Republicans, and many in the Democratic party, too often have been blinded by the media's racial stereotypes and have not been able to read our lips. They have not heard or understood what we have been saying.
The struggle for civil rights, public accommodations, the right to vote and open housing were not "wacky far-left notions," though some characterized them as such at the time—and some continue to do so even now. President Reagan, upon signing the Dr. Martin Luther King Holiday Bill, still implied he might have been a communist. The message was that we were not intelligent enough to rebel against our own oppression, we were being used and manipulated by left-wing communists.
The first time I went to jail it was for trying to use the public library. (See JESSE JACKSON, P. 2)

Teacher Of Yr. Receives Award, $1,000 Check

The Wake County Board of Education Monday recognized Mary Ann Glemza from Underwood Elementary School as the Wake County Teacher of the Year. Henry Knight, chairman of the school board, and William Burns, president of Central Carolina Bank, presented the award to Ms. Glemza during a banquet sponsored by Central Carolina Bank.
Central Carolina Bank for the first time this year sponsored the Gold Star Award to recognize outstanding classroom teachers in Wake County. The award included the Gold Star Award plaque and a $1,000 check given to the winner, and $500 cash awards and plaques given to the other four finalists.
Ms. Glemza has taught special education at Underwood Elementary since 1984. From 1980-84 she served at Combs, Swift Creek, and Underwood elementary schools. Prior to coming to Wake County, she worked in Greensboro. Ms. Glemza earned (See TEACHER, P. 2)

ORDERED TO REDUCE RATES
State Insurance Commissioner James E. Long has ordered the state's auto insurance agencies to reduce rates twice in the past nine months, but the costs for insuring your auto still haven't gone down. Instead, drivers will be paying 4.3 percent more starting Jan. 1, 1989. It's the fourth increase in four years.
Both times Commissioner Long ordered rates reduced—a 3.9 percent reduction in 1987 and a 1.4 percent cut this year—have been challenged by the insurance industry, which contends it hasn't been treated fairly in the decisions and has taken the battle for increased rates to the courts.
Currently pending before the appeals court are two auto insurance cases from 1986 and 1987. The appeals court heard arguments Oct. 25 in the first disputed auto-rate case. The court is expected to rule on that case early next spring. Attorneys for both sides say the decision could set a precedent for the other cases because they are so similar. Those appeals could prove costly for the insurance industry. If they lose, the companies would have to refund the rate of in- (See JUDGES' BENCH, P. 2)

WOMAN STRANGLED
A Wilson woman's nude body was found Saturday afternoon slumped on the floor of her car, with her head lying on the seat. An autopsy showed that Lori Jean Woodard Sauls, 27, was strangled. She was last seen alive on Wednesday, but was not reported missing until Saturday. The car was parked three blocks from the woman's home. So far, there have been no arrests in the case.

President Reagan Signs Price's Home Protection Bill Into Law

President Ronald Reagan has signed into law a major consumer protection bill authored by Fourth District Congressman David Price.
HR 3011, the Home Equity Loan Consumer Protection Act, became law over the Thanksgiving holiday. The president signed the bill on Nov. 23. The House originally approved the bill in June; the Senate agreed to the House version hours before adjournment on Oct. 22.
The law takes a major step in consumer protection by requiring lenders to disclose the full terms and obligations of home equity loans.
"The consumer is clearly the winner in the home equity game now," Price said Monday. "Under the new law, borrowers are assured of a fair deal when they take out loans.

"While home equity loans are popular financial tools, they can also place consumers at the mercy of unscrupulous lenders," Price said. "People who are risking the lifetime investment they've made in their homes will now get all the information they need to make wise financial decisions."
Home equity loans have been largely unregulated until now, despite their growing popularity. Home equity lending nearly doubled from 1986 to 1987, from an estimated $40 billion to $72 billion, due to recent changes in the tax code.

The new home equity law, which will take effect in mid-1989, amends the federal Truth-in-Lending Law to provide consumers with important safeguards. The law helps consumers shop around for the best deal; gives them a fuller and more accurate picture of costs associated with the loan; and makes sure they won't face unexpected changes to the loan terms after signing a home equity loan contract, Price said.
The law has three major provisions:
• First, lenders must disclose key information about the costs associated with home equity loans when handing out applications for such loans. Information on the loan's annual percentage rate: the manner (See HOME EQUITY, P. 2)

Non-Violent Action Fails In S. Africa

BY DANIEL MAROLEN
Who can still say that nonviolence can end apartheid? The struggle against apartheid has failed. Apartheid is at the pinnacle of its success. It has already succeeded in all aspects of its inhuman program and tenets. It has made South Africa an entirely white-dominated country. It has disenfranchised all of its 26 million black inhabitants. The white minority group occupies 85 percent and the black majority is confined to only 15 percent of the land area of the country.
In addition, the black-ruled territories that are adjacent to South Africa have been raided, laid waste and destabilized by South Africa. To blacks inside and on the periphery, South African life has become a virtual nightmare and reign of terror. Poverty, hunger and unemployment plague the black people, and the future looks gloomy for them.
The world community goes on hammering at South Africa with verbal condemnation of the racist country's inhuman scourge of racial segregation. But the world nation's efforts all end in utter failure because all these nations do is talk, talk, and talk, but do little else. This alone cannot end apartheid. Apartheid can only end through concerted action of world intervention. (See APARTHEID, P. 2)

CHAPTER FORMING

A local Catholic outreach chapter is forming in the greater Raleigh area. An organizational meeting will take place in the Community Room of St. Joseph Church at 7:30 p.m. Dec. 1. Local chapters are being organized throughout the diocese to help implement the National Black Catholic Pastoral Plan.

TYSON-BRUNO FIGHT OFF

Mike Tyson's Jan. 14, 1989 heavyweight title defense against Frank Bruno is off, this time amid accusations and threats of lawsuits. The fight was postponed when the Las Vegas Hilton, site of the scheduled match, backed out. The terms for a bout with Bruno, who first became the No. 1 contender for Tyson's undisputed crown over a year ago, would have earned the champion more than $6 million. Seth Abraham, head of HBO Sports, said, "It will be a long time before Mike Tyson fights again. There's a spiderweb of litigation out there now."

MS. TAYLOR NAMED TO FUQUA BOARD
