The more thorough preparation of the soil in the garden plot the easier it will be to take care of the crops during the growing season. Manure or cover crops should be well turned and cut into the soil. The plowing should not be done when the soil is too wet, especially in clay soils, or the soil may be "cloddy" for the rest of the season. As fine a seed bed as possible should be prepared for the sowing of small seeds.
Most vegetables do best in a soil reaction which is slightly acid—a pH of 6.5. If your soil is lower than a pH 6, enough lime should be added to bring it up to that point. Crops such as Irish potatoes, sweet potatoes, snap beans, tomatoes, watermelons, cabbage, mustard, and corn are quite tolerant of acid soils. On the other hand, such crops as asparagus, spinach, muskmelon, lettuce, celery, onions, beets, chard, cauliflower, and New Zealand spinach are not tolerant of acid soils and the soil should be brought up to a pH of 6 for these crops.
How deep should seed be planted? That is determined by several factors, of which the most important are size of seed, type of soil, moisture in the soil, and temperature or time of the year. It is sometimes said that seed should be planted to a depth of four times the diameter of the seed. That might not always be an accurate measure, but it is along the right direction. For instance, beans are usually planted from 1 to 1½ inches deep, while turnips are planted about ¼ inch deep. In clay soils seed should not be planted as deep as in sandy soils. In dry soils seed should be planted deeper than in moist soils. Lastly, in the summer when the soil is warm, seed may be planted deeper than in the spring or fall when the soil is cold.
In any case see that the soil is firmed over the seed. The back of a rake is a good tool for this job. It firms the soil without packing the surface.

Working as a "grunt" digging holes for telephone poles has been the starting point for many a key telephone man. They know it's the start of an important life's work—and they stick to it.
Their dependability is good reason why American telephone service is the most reliable in the world.
