INCREASED POTATO CROP FOR 1952 IN N. CAROLINA
RALEIGH.—North Carolina's sweet potato growers will harvest an average of 11 more bushels per acre this year than in 1951 and one bushel less than the 10-year (1941-50) average, it was estimated today by the State-Federal Crop Reporting Service.
The total crop for 1952, based on the October 1 estimate, is set at 4,410,000 bushels, as compared with 3,760,000 bushels in 1951 and the 10-year average of 6,850,000. This would mean a yield of 105 bushels, and the 10-year average yield was 106 bushels.
The outlook for yams has improved steadily since August 1, according to the Crop Reporting Service, when rains relieved drought conditions that had prevailed over most of the State since early June. The estimated 42,000 acres for harvest this year is the second smallest acreage since 1920.

Mrs. Lem Cohoon, were married Saturday Oct. 11, 1952 at four o'clock at the Baptist Parsonage with the Reverend W. E. Pope officiating. Their parents and a few close friends and relatives attended. After the wedding the couple left on a wedding trip to Cuba.

ROT RESISTANT YAM MAY BE DEVELOPED
The discovery of high resistance to black rot fungus in certain seedlings of the sweet potato may mean that plant breeders can develop new commercial varieties of this crop resistant to black rot, according to H. M. Covington, State College Extension horticulturist. Black rot is probably the most destructive disease of sweet potatoes in this country.
The development of suitable methods and the finding of seedlings with this resistance to the fungus is the work of Dr. Pen Ching Cheo, a native of Nanking, China. Dr. Cheo has been studying plant pathology in the United States since 1947. He has been at the Plant Industry Station, Beltsville, Md., doing research under a grant from study here as a part of a State Department program of aid to scholars.
All commercial varieties of the sweet potato in this country had been considered susceptible to black rot, and commercial varieties from the seedlings developed in breeding work at the Plant Industry Station had shown no resistance to black rot in tests several years ago. Among these seedlings, Dr. Cheo has found a few with black rot resistance.
