BEACH WARNED OF NEW RULES ON BEER SALE

All Advertising Material Forbidden; Operators Warned Disorderliness Won't Be Tolerated

Nags Head. — How the beach conducts itself this summer will be a determining factor in whether or not beer can be sold next year, a state representative told a gathering of persons selling beer, meeting at the Casino last week.

If those who sell beer can operate their business in an orderly fashion, there will be less objection to it, the gathering was warned. Even one incident of disorder tracable to sale of beer will be a black mark against the beach and will tend to bring about complete prohibition of the sale.

A new law concerning sale of beer will go into effect July 11. After that, the selling of beer must be made as inconspicuous as possible. No posters or signs advertising beer may be sold. Menu covers, ash trays, service trays or mirrors with the word beer or the name of a beer product on them may not be used. One bottle or can of each brand sold may be displayed on shelves. Outside the place of business, one sign may be used showing the beer permit number, but the letters on it may not be more than five inches high.

Every place selling beer must have a store room in which to keep it out of sight, or, lacking that, the bottles or cans must be kept under canvas. Empties must also be kept out of sight.

All of these regulations, the beach dealers were told, are designed to discourage disorderliness and remove the principal objections raised to the sale of beer. The operators of places selling beer, either to drink on the premises or to take out, were warned that the new law would be strictly enforced.
