GARDEN TIME ROBERT SCHMIDT N.C. STATE COLLEGE

I have already received a number of new seed catalogs for 1954 and they are better than ever — beautifully illustrated, and containing many new varieties of flowers and vegetables. If you haven't received yours, address a post card to your favorite seed house, or send for several different ones so that you can compare their specialties.

Each company has certain specialties and novelties which it emphasizes and recommends to its customers, as well as the standard varieties. This is especially true of hybrid varieties. A few seed companies produce new hybrid varieties of vegetables being introduced by seeds — especially of tomatoes, cucumbers, and sweet corn. Some of these are distinct improvements over standard varieties; some are not as good. The way to find out if they suit your needs is to try them out.

The seed of hybrid varieties are usually more expensive than standard sorts because of the labor involved in hand pollination. The home gardener should try out small plantings of these new varieties and hybrids because he takes very little financial risk and at the same time he may be well pleased with the results. He should, however, continue to plant the old proven varieties until he has given the new ones a fair trial.

Every gardener should take an interest in the "All America" vegetable and flower variety selections of the last few years. These have been tested in several different locations in the country and can be generally recommended. Good examples are Wade snap beans, Salad Bowl leaf lettuce, Premier Great Lakes head lettuce, American spinach, Cherry Belle radish, and many others.

Next week's column will include a list of recommended vegetable and flower varieties.
