

GLIMPSES OF THE PAST

Applications for charter membership in the AMA (Absent-Minded Anonymous) are coming in steadily.

First case: A young woman, noted for her civic work, was preparing peanuts for a tea at the library.

Second case: One of Belhaven's most capable women, well-known as an excellent housekeeper, went from room to room emptying the contents of small wastebaskets into a larger one.

Third case: A teacher (the proverbial absent-minded professor, no doubt) was asked by her young child at home for an aspirin.

Fourth case: Another teacher—me again, still way out front. The scene: my classroom just before the bell rings to signal the beginning of class work.

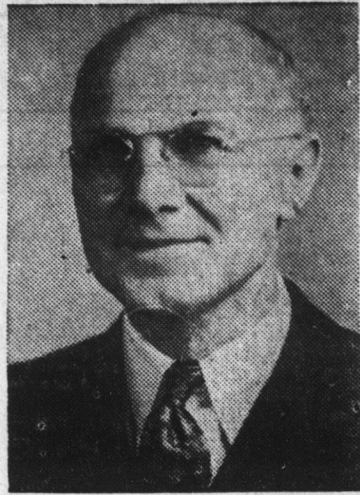

Is there hope? Can these sufferers be cured? Only time can tell.

So far, no one has reported having forgotten to buy her Easter bonnet—that would be cause for alarm.

at the new styles. No doubt about it, hats are different this year. In case one should have forgotten to buy a new one, or is short of cash, she can take the lid off the garbage can, the top of the roaster, or a large skillet, trim it with flowers and a bit of veil, and no one will know the difference.

Moral: if you have a reputation for being absent-minded, turn it to advantage. Sometimes it's smart to be dumb.

WEST VIRGINIA PULP AND PAPER INCOME RISES

Sales and earnings of West Virginia Pulp & Paper for the first four months of the current fiscal year were up sharply from results in the comparable period a year ago.

Luke reported the company had earnings of $5,977,000 equal to $1.17 per common share on sales of $62,503,000 in the four months ended February 29.

Basic reasons for the improved results, said Luke, are the company's investment in physical plant and its improved product pattern.

The company's current expansion program calls for expenditure of more than 100 million dollars for plant improvements through 1959.

Tried Any New Angles Lately?

We know some cynical souls who maintain that there is an "angle" to everything—but that's not the kind we're talking about.

We want to remind you that there are more ways to picture your children at play, for example, than to shoot them head on.

The picture we've chosen to illustrate this column shows clearly what happens when you look down on your subjects through the viewfinder.

In this case it seems like an excellent idea, since the subjects have paused long enough in their play to observe the cameraman's activities and thus we get a good view of their faces.

Here the camera angle gives a good clear picture of the activity and finds an ideally plain background that at the same time tells part of the story.

By varying your camera angle you can many times find a good, non-distracting background in a situation which, if pictured in more straight forward fashion would present an unwanted mass of clutter to call attention away from the subject.

Some subjects, however, are at their best when pictured straight ahead. Just don't let yourself get in a rut and use any one angle all the time.
