A SURPRISING AMOUNT OF GARDEN SEEDS SOLD

Many People In Dare County Planting Gardens This Year; High Living Cost May Cause It
While all the little fields, just about, have disappeared from Roanoke Island, one would think there would be no sale for seeds and fertilizer. But such is not the case. A surprising amount of garden seeds and fertilizer is being sold, right here in Manteo by G. G. Bonner of General Supply Company. And all through Dare County people are planting gardens. Anent this subject, the following news release is interesting:

Washington.—As a harbinger of spring, the ground hog, robin and first crocus each has its advocates. But to many people there's no more enticing promise of spring than simple garden seed.

Since dreary January, gardeners have been thumbing through their seed catalogues where, as one helplessly addicted reader admits, "all melons are monsters, all asters are giant, all petunias double-fringed." The magic of the dreambooks dissolves all memory of past failures. And hope for this year's gardens rises like sap in the trees.

For their 1956 gardens, an estimated 30,000,000 Americans will buy flower seeds and about half as many vegetable seeds, says the National Geographic Society. Seed sales have never been better. One large mail order company alone puts out as many as 1,500 varieties.

Another company, which sells through racks in stores, offers 1,100. One of its most loyal customers, an elderly lady who trades at a Philadelphia department store, arrives with her chauffeur each spring and buys one packet of every single variety.

Vegetables, Beware!
Not all buyers are so easily persuaded. Most are especially wary of new vegetables. One catalogue once devoted a whole page in praise of a newly developed vegetable called tampala. A Chinese import, it resembled spinach but withstood heat better and didn't collect sand. Now, a decade later, tampala is relegated to a back-page mention and good old sandy spinach holds down its traditional place in the book.

Even yellow sweet corn had to be given away at first. People wouldn't buy anything that looked like "horse corn." Broccoli also had a hard time catching on. Since 1940, however, its sales have tripled. Such success augurs well for purple cauliflower, an old vegetable now being revived. It turns green when cooked and tastes like broccoli.

Nationwide, the best seller continues to be the radish, followed in order by lettuce, beets and cucumbers. Gardeners' tastes vary enough according to tradition and geography, however, that one company sends its seeds to stores in special assortments. Northern states get such quick-growers as carrots, beets, lettuce and radishes. The S (South) assortment features white radishes, collards, okra, turnips and mustard greens.

Calls for the S assortment have recently been increasing in the north. In fact, the only assortment for which demand remains stolidly predictable is the E—New England. Except in Boston, where the I. V. (Italian) special cuts across geographic lines, New Englanders can still be counted on to want their pole beans, early corn and winter squash.

Zinnias are No. 1
In flowers, tastes are more universal. Zinnias are the favorites; petunias, nasturtiums and sweet peas, the runners-up.
Petunias produce seeds so minute that some of the more expensive hybrid varieties are worth many times over their weight in gold. One ounce, containing more than 275,000 seeds, wholesales at
