

DEMONSTRATION DOINGS IN DARE

One of the biggest developments in agriculture food production in recent years has been the broiler-fryer industry.

Not too many years ago, the broiler chicken was an expensive treat available to families during the summer months only. But times have changed! Tremendous progress has been made in the efficiency of producing and marketing broilers.

Today, adequate supplies of broilers are available to all consumers every month of the year at economical prices. As a result, the consumption of chicken has doubled in 15 years and broilers are no longer considered a luxury item.

North Carolina is among the nation's top producers of broilers. About one-third of the total broiler production in this state is located in Chatham and Wilkes counties.

Gross income to broiler producers in North Carolina last year was 43 million dollars as compared to one million in 1940.

The market supply of broilers can be predicted to some extent by the weekly chick placements. It takes about 10 weeks to ready a broiler for market. From all indications of current chick placements, it appears that a plentiful supply of broilers will be reaching local markets from now until June. To the consumer this will mean that broilers will be a good buy during the next several months.

From a practical standpoint, there is very little difference in broiler and fryer chickens. Most producers call them broilers while retailers call them fryers. The broiler is supposed to be somewhat younger and more tender than fryers.

Since most broilers have not been government inspected or graded in N. C., it is up to the consumer to recognize quality. When buying broilers, look for these characteristics:

1. Flexible breast bone (indicates young bird).
 2. Soft, pliable, smooth-textured, yellow skin with few pinfeathers.
 3. Well-fleshed breast and legs.
 4. Weights of 1 1/2 to 2 1/2 lbs. in ready-to-cook birds.
- Avoid:
1. Hard breast bone.
 2. Bruised, dry or purplish skin.

3. Hard scaly legs.
 4. Poorly dressed birds.
- Allow 3/4 to 1 lb. of chicken per person when you buy broilers. Broilers are available whole, cut up and by the piece in fresh or frozen forms.

Besides tasting good, chicken is good for you. Like other lean meats, chicken is a good source of protein... complete protein. This means that the protein supplies all of the essential amino acids or "building blocks"... necessary for building and repairing body tissues. In addition, chicken furnishes B vitamins and important minerals including iron.

You get excellent food value returns when you serve chicken... especially broilers which are plentiful and reasonable now.

Another 4-H dream has come true—a National 4-H Club Center in the form of a 12 1/2 acre campus with five buildings, adequate parking, beauty and quiet dignity. Twenty minutes away are the Capitol, the shrines and symbols of our democracy. The Center will have new lodging, dining and conference facilities for groups of up to 300 persons. It will be operated year around on a non-profit basis.

North Carolina 4-H club members and extension workers have been invited to SHARE and CARE in the use and enjoyment of this National 4-H Club Center. At the time plans were made for the establishment of the Center, the State 4-H leaders in their national meeting decided that every 4-H member and every Extension worker should have a part in the establishment of the 4-H Center. It was decided that each state should contribute ten cents for each 4-H member enrolled and one dollar for each Extension worker. It was further agreed that this was to be a contribution from 4-H members and Extension workers and that this would not be an appeal for a general solicitation of funds but that the SHARE and CARE should be limited to 4-H members and Extension workers. Now is a good time for each boy and girl to begin saving his 10¢.

Mrs. Grimsley surely made our Spring Federation meeting a success Tuesday with her warm smile and delightful talk on the different stages of family development. As Mrs. Curtis Toler said we all felt like we'd like to sit back and listen to her all day.

All of us who attended surely say Thank You to the Buxton Club for being perfect hostesses and to Mrs. Harold Gray for a wonderful luncheon.

the Snapshot Guild

A picture like this offers a nice change of pace from the more usual sunny day snapshots of children.

Snapshots Can Bloom in April Showers

Though poets have hailed April equally for its "golden suns" and its "silver rain," many picture-takers get their spirits dampened by a sudden spring shower. They wrongly feel that they have to put their cameras away until the sun comes out again.

We suggest that you capitalize on the next rainy day and let your camera catch some unusual shots—maybe the youngsters hopping from puddle to puddle, a neighbor walking an unwilling pup, or passersby and their ballet of umbrellas reflected in the glistening pavement.

To be sure that you keep your camera dry, select a sheltered doorway or a window from which to do your shooting. That way there'll be no raindrops spatter-ing on the lens to blur its vision and spoil your snapshot.

Remember, too, to choose a fairly bright rainy day for your picture taking. This will assure good results even with ordinary snapshot film in a simple camera. If you want to, however, you can have special "rain insurance" by loading your camera with extra fast film—it's practically foolproof for shooting on a rainy day!

The next time it rains don't let a little thing like an April shower dampen your picture-taking plans. Weather or not—your camera is always ready to help you get interesting shots for your album. So don't be a fairweather friend try shooting in the rain, too!
