ELLISON RECOUNTS HIS IMPRESSIONS OF FARAWAY FORMOSA

William A. Ellison, of Belhaven, who recently returned from Taiwan (Formosa), where he was associated with the U. S. government as a scientist and fisheries expert, has much of interest to tell about the people, both the natives and the Nationalist Chinese. Mr. Ellison and his wife availed themselves of every opportunity to learn more about the people than can be seen from casual observation.

"We cut across all lines," he said. "We had tea in the poorest sort of farm-houses on the one hand and, on the other, in the amazingly multiple family homes of the well-to-do. We knew the pedi-cab drivers and the laboring people and attended functions which the President and his wife graced. The average American could never have any concept of this part of the world unless he had lived here among the people and in close contact with them. One of the things which impressed me is the insatiable desire for knowledge and the effort that the people will make in order to learn. I was constantly amazed at the hours which the schools keep and at the high standards that the high schools and universities insist be met. In addition to what they learn by going to school six days a week they fill the libraries and reading rooms on the seventh. Another thing which impressed me was the devoutness and childlike faith of Christian Chinese. I attended the Easter service at one of the local Chinese Baptist churches and found a congregation of nearly 1,000. A surprising number of the leaders of the country are Christians. I was surprised to learn that sectarianism was practically non-existent. I think that does great credit to the missionaries who have gone to the island. I had always imagined that in foreign countries the churches were built by the generosity of the American public. There the facts are contrary to this idea. While substantial contributions have been made from America or Canada, the bulk of the load has been carried by the Chinese themselves. The Baptist is probably the leading church there, with the Presbyterian coming next. Incidentally, the Christian Chinese are not of the riff raff. In my office alone, there were three Christian Chinese. One holds an M. A. from the Imperial University in Tokyo; another an M. A. from the National Taiwan University, and my secretary a very pretty and gracious girl has a degree from an English college at Tansui, a seaport town about 30 miles from Taipei. The island has an eighty-five percent illiteracy rate, though the schools are crowded and the children go to school in three shifts. It was interesting to note that the little boys who graze the water buffalo always take along a book to read or a musical instrument to play."

Mr. Ellison added that he thinks that the United States is justified in aid to Formosa and the Nationalist Chinese. Had the island not been supported by our government, he believes, it would long since have been in Communist hands, but not through the will of the people, and that would have been a step toward greater Communist domination in the Far East.

Washington—The famed Scythe Tree near Waterloo, New York, is a unique memorial to a young soldier of the Civil War. When the boy left for the front, he hung his scythe in the crotch of a Balm of Gilead poplar and asked that it be left there until he returned. He never did. The growing tree enveloped the scythe's blade, and today only six inches of it show, the National Geographic Society says.
