YOUR SOCIAL SECURITY

By ANNA K. RANKIN, Field Representative

Social Security payments have been increased by about 7 percent, beginning with checks payable in February, 1959. Protection for families in the form of monthly income has become more and more significant with each change in the social security law. From the early days of the Act, when no family could receive more than $80 a month, to the new maximum of $254 a month, these provisions have grown into a realistic approach to the problems a family faces when a worker retires, dies, or becomes permanently disabled.

In all planning for the years ahead, a family must face the possibility of death, long illness, or insufficient resources after retirement of the breadwinner. Social security benefits do not and should not be expected to replace, dollar for dollar, the income a worker and his family can earn, but they can and should be used as a base in planning for the future. A person who knows how much he and his family will receive if he retires, becomes disabled, or dies is a person who can plan carefully to round out that income and use these benefits as a firm foundation for his family's needs. Knowing what he can expect from social security, he should strive to add insurance, savings, investments, etc. to adequately provide for his family.

All workers should find out how much they can expect to receive. No two cases are identical and your neighbor's family may receive more or less than yours. All payments are based upon the worker's average monthly earnings.

Following are some examples of typical family benefits now payable:

Present Benefit	Present Family Maximum	New Benefit	New Family Maximum
$ 78.50	$160.00	$ 84.00	$165.50
88.50	200.00	95.00	206.50
98.50	200.00	105.00	240.00
108.50	200.00	116.00	254.00

In amending the provisions for family payments the new law now provides for payments to aged dependent parents of deceased workers as well as to their widows, widowers, and children. In addition, a totally disabled qualified worker's dependents may now receive monthly payments when he has reached the age of 50, instead of waiting until he is 65 as in the past. Thus, the 1958 Amendments to the Social Security Act now provide a better cushion against the financial hazards of old age, long illness or death, which we all face.
