ROANOKE ISLAND ARTIST GIVES WORK TO LIBRARY

Beach Scene Is Second in Library By Local Artists; Harwood Collection
To Be Shown Thursday Night

An oil painting given by Don Leary, Roanoke Island artist, to the Dare County Library, will be one of the attractions at open house Thursday night, April 16, when the Harwood art collection goes on display. The picture is an ocean scene of this area, with sand hills and beach grass in the foreground.

There are now two pictures by local artists in the art collection, Mrs. James Bardin having presented one of hers several years ago. Since tourists and natives frequently ask for local art, the library is urging other artists in Dare County to contribute at least one picture to form a local department of the Harwood art collection.

Mrs. Georgia Harwood, retired librarian, began the collection of pictures in 1941 in order to familiarize people with the reproductions of the treasures in museums, which are not readily accessible to the majority of Dare County residents. These pictures range from the art of the cave man through ancient art of the East to the modern art of Europe and America.

Some pictures are in expensive books, the gift of the Bollingen Foundation. These do not circulate; however many portfolios and framed pictures are available for home use.

Among the books are histories of art, lives of painters and critical studies. A good place to begin reading is with the over-all picture in THE STORY OF ART by E. Gombrich, which may be followed by Thomas Craven's MEN OF ART and his MODERN ART.

Painting is an ideal hobby from kindergarten to old age. The very best beginner can have fun by following the steps given in Norman Garbo's DRAW UP AN EASEL and Paul Hartley's HOW TO PAINT, to mention only two of the How-To-Do-It-Books.
