SENATOR SAM ERVIN SAYS

MORGANTON — October 18th was a great day for Western North Carolina when ground was broken for the Carolina Power and Light Company's new 250,000 horsepower steam-electric generating plant at Skyland. Mrs. Ervin and I were privileged to attend the ceremony. The drive by automobile from Morganton to Skyland gave me the opportunity to see the mountains arrayed in all of their fall splendor, and to recall John Charles McNeill's poem "October" which space does not permit me to quote. The ceremony began promptly at 11 a. m. on a 760-acre tract just west of Skyland and east of the French Broad River where the new plant will soon rise to the height of a 16-story building. Makers outlined the site of a 300-acre lake which will provide water for the plant. A 1,000 foot dam will cross the valley in an area of unsurpassed beauty. In normal operation the new plant will produce enough electricity to serve 200,000 Western North Carolina families. Recreation facilities will provide public areas when the project is completed.

POWER FOR CAROLINA — My remarks on the occasion recalled to my mind the vast impact which electricity has had in the twentieth century on the homes of this country. Perhaps this can be best illustrated by fancying that by a whim of the Creator it was decreed one day that all electricity would cease to work. If this happened in a typical North Carolina home during the evening, the television set would flicker off, darkness would settle over the house, and soon the occupants would shiver from cold because the electrical controls of the furnace would cease to function. When morning dawned there would be no milk and no newspaper on the front porch, and what started as a series of mere inconveniences would grow during the day into serious trouble and would end in a national emergency. Not only do North Carolinians receive these services from electricity, but many other aspects of our society are built from taxation on the property, plants, and facilities of the electric power industry. Private investor owned North Carolina power companies contribute millions in tax revenues and throughout the country investor owned power companies contribute $2.4 billions in highways, schools, colleges, health facilities, and all facets of government are supported by an industry that Britain's future Prime Minister Gladstone condemned in 1831 as of no use. That day Mr. Gladstone was being shown through the electrical laboratory of Michael Faraday, one of the industry's forefathers, and asked Faraday, "But after all, what good is electricity?" Faraday replied: "Why, sir, one day you will tax it."

HYDE N.F.A. GROUP ATTENDS STATE FAIR

Members of the O. A. Peay chapter of New Farmers of America made a trip to the State Fair as a phase of the instructional program of the Vocational Agriculture Department. Eighteen members of the local chapter received instructions and a first hand look at activities such as pure breeds of livestock grown and some of the advantages and disadvantages involved in the production and marketing.

Phases of producing livestock was presented to persons in attendance on a limited scale and along with the production and marketing was the matter of competing with others of a similar nature from different parts of the state.

Other things of interest were the educational exhibits displayed in the fields of agriculture, education and industry.

The group demonstrated great interest and has been inspired toward working hard on their individual projects to display them at the State Fair in the future. They were under the supervision of M. J. Rountree, agriculture teacher.
