THE TIMES GOES ALL THE WAY TO COAST BY NIGHT

Fast Train Service Spreads Today's News Across State on Same Day

The first essential of success for an afternoon newspaper is the ability to deliver live news to the readers while it's news. A paper of "yesterday" is not valued by progressive people of these modern times. Today's news on the day it happens is what people now demand.

In order to reach those portions of the State where readers formerly waited until next morning for their favorite newspaper, THE TIMES made the necessary arrangements for an early edition, and now, with its noon and 2:30 editions, covers all of central and eastern North Carolina before night. Every train leaving the capital city after 12 o'clock noon, and up until night time carries copies of THE TIMES. People in Morehead City now receive this paper at 7:30 p. m. It gets to Tarboro at 5:05 p. m., in Wilmington at 8:10, and there are hundreds of places where it can secure an audience now instead of being a "back number" as it was in the past.

Ordinarily, most out-of-town readers are glad to take regular trips to their postoffices on arrival of the afternoon mails bearing THE TIMES. In a number of places, news agents have been appointed to deliver papers direct into readers' homes without the necessity of a trip to the postoffice. There are forty-seven of these out-of-town news agents who are delivering THE TIMES every day to readers who want to "white their news." These agents are as follows:

- Aberdeen—Gordon Keith.
- Benson—John F. Hall.
- Burlington—Gayle Cuthfield.

BROKE INTO BANK CHARGES THE LAW

Little Colored Boy Said He Put In Quarter Under Wrong Impression

The seriousness of breaking into and robbing a bank was very forcefully impressed upon the mind of Will Stephens, a fourteen-year-old colored boy this morning as Capt. Jack Bensley, after searching him, locked him up in the guard-house with nothing but a looking-glass, in order that he might reflect. In the pocket with the looking-glass the boy had a knife, which was left on Capt. Jack's desk until the defendant should be liberated or sentenced, as the case may be.

Will—more formally William, the most distorted name in the English language probably—swore by all that was in sight that he put a quarter in the bank, which belonged to one George Haywood.

"Jes' let me 'splain," he pleaded, between sniffs, after he had been formally presented to Capt. Jack by Officer Nichols, who, in a very grave tone, said: "Look him up."

"Yassir, jes' lemme 'splain. I didn' know there wuz any harm in it. He told me, he say: 'Ef you put a quarter in dere, the do' will fly open'; but the do' didn' fly open an' I busted it."

The allegation of the law is that the gas-meter coin wasn't deposited in the bank at all, but that the defendant blew the safe and secured the two-bits without warning, which was regarded as an extremely unfriendly act. It was also stated that young William Tell, whose hands, it is charged, are magnetized, once stole the same bicycle twice and was going after it the third time when a motorcycle officer picked him up.

The defendant is given to sniffling and not to verbal outbursts such as characterize some youths of his age. Yet, he can very audaciously enter a plea of not guilty.

PRESENTATION OF BROOKS PORTRAIT

Formal Exercises Held In Federal Court Room Monday Night

The portrait of Judge George W. Brooks, the last federal judge of the State of North Carolina, and the first federal judge of the Eastern District, was presented to the federal court last night and will occupy a prominent place on the walls of the court room. The portrait is an excellent one and was done by one of the leading painters of the country. United States District Attorney Francis D. Winston made the speech presenting the portrait, and adding a sketch of the life of Judge Brooks. Judge H. G. Connor accepted the portrait for the court.

Among relatives present, at whose instance the portrait was presented, were Dr. George W. Brooks, of Sun-

Rabbi Bray To Officiate at Services To Be Held Here

BEGINS ON WEDNESDAY

A Brief Sketch of the Meaning of the Day From a Jewish Standpoint

The Jewish new year will begin on Wednesday evening, September 8th, with an ornate solemn service in the Temples and Synagogues. Rabbi Bray will officiate at services in this city. The Thursday morning service comprises a more elaborate form of worship and combines some vestiges of antique ritual with expressions of human experiences and feelings true and real for everybody and at all times.

A prominent Jewish leader says: "The Jewish new year's festival is the oldest of all festivals celebrated in the civilized world. But it is unique for its significance as well as for its antiquity. The secular new year (on January 1st) is a day of gratifications; men rejoice in what they have achieved; it is a day for sordid inventories. The Jewish new year's day, however, is a time for serious thought on the meaning of life; it evokes pious contemplation of the difficult and ineluctable problem as to right and wrong and its appeal is not that we should get more out of practical life but more genuinely, more truthfully, more morally the life God has entrusted to us. Much of the success and failure of right interpretation of life and a true measure of its value.

"The antique features of the ritual of that day express the aspirations all men feel equally. The trumpet calls, constituting the central part in the worship of that day are appeals for the mortal stir which men should feel when they contemplate their experiences and seek for re-enforcement of their hopes. The calls are also an appeal to the large sense of life. Our week-day wishes and prayers are self-centered and do not give us a perspective of our relations and obligations to the community and fellowman, and of their influence upon us. But the new year's day offers us an occasion to reaffirm our respect for and trust in Providence which is the organization of all lives into an all-encompassing justice. The Jew comprehends this as a comfort in the case of misfortunes and as admonition in the successes he may have. The function of the new year's day is to establish a moral judgment in our life and experiences."
